DAILY MORNING POST.

THURSDAY MORNING.....JANUARY 12

San Francisco Items—Late Arrivals.

There are now thirteen daily newspapers published in San Francisco.

The gas company are proceeding rapidly with their works; have laid their pipes through all the principal streets, and expected to light a few buildings on New Year's day.

A large number of vessels have arrived during the week, bringing heavy cargoes to our market, already overstocked.

Building is still going on extensively, and business generally about the city appears to be quite as lively as before the beginning of the rainy season.

There have been several highway robberies lately. Several arrests have been made, but only one of the accused has been held so far.

There has been considerable difficulty in the Fire Department. Three hundred members have resigned.

D. Mahony, a Broderick man, has been nominated for Senator for the county, in the place of Brannan resigned.

The brig Tryphenia sailed on the 13th with forty Germans, intending to settle peaceably in Sonora.

The machinery for the San Francisco Mint, to be in operation on the 1st February, arrived on the 10th.

The British ship Jenny Lind was wrecked in going out of the harbor on the 11th.

The hills west of the city have been found to contain peroxyde of tin.

A company has been formed in the city to construct a dry dock at Saucelito.

The steamer El Primero, designed for the Costa Rica and New Grenada coast navigation, sailed from this city on the 13th.

The land commission decided eleven cases on the 13th, confirming six of 44,000 acres, and rejecting five of 115,180 acres.

A survey is to be made for a railroad route from Sacramento, through Diamond Springs, to Lake Valley.

The machinery, and part of the mails of the Winfield Scott, are entirely lost. The vessel has not yet broken.

The Pacific Railroad Surveying Expedition is busy in the south. It is divided into two parties; one is engaged on the Colorado, the other on the San Luis river. The passes of Tejon and Cañada de las Uvas, in the Sierra Nevada, and Cajon, Gorgona and Agua Caliente, in the Coast Range; the entire coast of the Mohave, to its disappearance in the desert, and the whole adjacent country have been thoroughly explored, and a very able and elaborate report is expected, which will set at rest the conflicting claims of different routes for the Pacific Railroad in the Southern portion of the State.

There has been a large amount of rain during the week, which has filled the gulches and enabled the miners to wash a large amount of dirt thrown up during the summer. The rivers are high, and probably will fall little before February.

The rainy season, so far, has been moderately severe; the old Californians say the most copious rains have passed.

Dates had been received at San Francisco up to the 1st of December from Portland, Oregon. Governor Davis had arrived in good health, and was warmly received by the people of Oregon.

Rain had fallen in considerable quantities throughout Oregon. A severe storm, which lasted three days, had swept over the coast, and caused several marine disasters. No vessels had been reported lost, though the non-arrival of three coasters, which left the Columbia river in company with several others, caused considerable anxiety for their fate.

The fillibustering party of forty-five men, which left here on the 17th of October, reached and took La Paz, in Lower California, and run up the revolutionary flag, on the 3d November; captured the Governor and his intended successor, the latter before he had placed his foot on land. On the 6th, they had a skirmish with the natives; on the same day, sailed for San Lucas, where they arrived on the 8th.

On the 9th, they sailed for Ensenada, about 100 miles south of San Diego, on the Pacific coast, where they arrived on the 28th. On the 30th, they dispatched their Secretary of State for re-inforcements. On the 3d of December, they made an excursion to forage or to capture the Governor, (accounts differ,) and were attacked and defeated with a loss of twelve or fourteen men. The Mexicans followed them, drove them into an adobe house at Ensenada, besieged them there, and cut off their boats, so that they could not get off to the Caroline, which lay at anchor in the roadstead.

This account may be exaggerated, as it was brought to San Diego by a vaquero, who came to report to his employer, a San Diegoeno, who had a ranch near Ensenada, that the fillibusters were making havoc among the stock and property on the ranch. If the story be correct, there are only about twenty five fillibusters on shore, shut up in an adobe house, with a very small stock of water and provisions, besieged by we know not how many Mexicans, though two hundred fighting men, might be raised in the vicinity. This was the state of affairs on the 6th. On the 7th, the news arrived at San Diego; on the 8th, several small squads crossed the line, who would arrive on the 9th or 10th; and the party which left this port in the Anita, on the 13th, would arrive about the 20th.—San Francisco Paper.

The Pacific Railroad.

The bill authorizing the construction of the Pacific Railroad through the State of Texas, has passed the State Senate, and has gone before the House of Representatives. A majority of twenty gave proof of the light in which it was regarded by the Senate, and the impression is that it will go through the House without any delay. The place of commencement of the route at the East is not designated, provided it be south of Fulton, but it must cross the Trinity, Brazos, and Colorado rivers at the practicable points nearest to the thirty-second degree of latitude, and from thence run as near the parallel as possible to El Paso.

The State gives twenty-five sections of six hundred and forty acres of land to the company, whose propositions are accepted, for every mile of the road constructed and put in operation, of which it is to receive one-ninth so soon as the route has been selected, and five hundred thousand dollars have been deposited as security for the fulfilment of their contract.

The terms which are offered by Texas, must be considered as exceedingly liberal, and as sufficient to secure the company against any loss which it may suffer in the construction of the road, in time. But the people of Texas do not anticipate any such result, provided the road be completed. If we judge from the report of the Senate Committee on Internal Improvements, it is believed that the trade of the East Indies—that trade which they remember "built up Tyre and Alexandria, and enabled Carthage to rival imperial Rome," &c., &c.,—will at once, upon the completion of the thoroughfare, flow through the State of Texas, paying tribute as it passes.

Be that as it may, should this bill become a law, Texas will have done her part in offering inducements to those capitalists who choose to venture in the great work, and what she has done, is clearly within the province of a State to do.

Should the proposals be accepted, it will, under the provisions of the law, be some time before it can be completed through Texas, and whatever may be the present action of the U. States, or whether there be any immediate action upon their part at all, there will be little legislative difficulty in pushing the road through from El Paso to the boundaries of California. When completed, whether it brings the whole amount of trade anticipated by the sanguine Texans or not, it will be a great national benefit, and with such advantages as they have offered, the constructors can hardly suffer loss. It may be regarded as a sure thing through Texas, in one way or another.—Washington Sentinel.

The bill has since passed the House, and Texas is fully committed for the great national road.

☞ Hereafter the Crystal Palace is to be closed at dusk, instead of being lighted up during the evening.
