The Free Press.

BY A. H. LADLAW.

Hark to the Press's thundering frame!
Its shuddering shock—its giant stroke.
With inky blood and breath of flame,
It groans beneath its mighty yoke.
Its jotty blood in torrents flows,
Enriching though it soils its sole,
Till sunk in mind its current flows
Bright as the blood of fabled gods;
And mind or man may fear no blow,
Nor tyrant bid us bend the knee,
Long as that proud slave's blood can flow,
Or strong arm strike for Liberty.

That groaning serf is yet a king,
Whose very minions boast of power;
His children round us jewels fling
In princely, bright, incessant shower.
First-born to him is unchained Art,
That clasps the world o'er turf and tide,
Binding all nations heart to heart,
Although the swelling seas divide.
Before its birth, you starry veil,
A map of monsters vilely feigned—
The lightning's flash, with thunder's peal,
An airy Gorgon tameless reigned.
But God to Art bade Newton rise,
And Franklin to the world proclaimed;
They framed them steps to mount the skies,
And heaven was scaled—the lightning tamed!

Then twin-like Science o'er the world
A glory like the sunlight threw;
While Freedom's armoured hand unfurled
Its bannered "stars and stripes" to view.
Beneath their beams our land at length
Her millions marched through War's Red Sea;
Then struck the tyrant's rock of strength,
Whence sprang the stream of Liberty.
From mount to mount, and hill to hill,
Past rock-bid hut, o'er peopled plain,
It goes and gathers, rushing still
Resistless to the roaring main.
To give fresh vigor to the globe,
From inland town to skirting shore,
Till all resume the royal robe,
That king or kaiser claims no more.

Tow down yon daring warrior domes,
That rise up heavenward taunting high,
Yon piles, the towering hopes and homes
Of kings, who dreamed they should not die.
Tear from their blood-bought, slave-built base
Those mocking, shame-recording stones,
And rear ye broad, on earth's green face,
A mark for her deserving ones—
Her lightning-chaining heroes bold,
Heaven-climbing souls who spurn the clod,
Earth's wondrous-brained and salient-souled,
Who, in man, make man see his God.
Proclaim the reign of art, not arms,
Whose outstretched arms not blight, but bless;
Whose words will calm the world's wild storms—
With power regird the mighty Press!

The Money Market.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21, 1859.

The bank statement for this week shows the results of the contraction noted by us on Friday to be a diminution of loans to the extent of nearly a quarter of a million of dollars, the immediate effect of the loss of a similar amount of specie, and the cause of the decline in a similar degree of the amount on deposit. The other items, circulation, and the sums due to banks, and due from other banks, have also been lessened.

Philadelphia Markets.

NOVEMBER 21—Evening.

There is no change in the Flour market. The retailers and bakers are about the only buyers, at prices ranging from $5 25 to $5 50 $5 50 for superfine extras and fancy brands, as to quality; a sale of 200 bbls good Western extra have been made at $5 75 ₩ bbl. The market closes rather dull. Rye Flour and Corn Meal are steady; small sales of the former at $4 25, and the latter is held at $3 37 for Pennsylvania Meal. Wheat is in moderate supply and steady to price, with sales of 3 000 bus at 127@130c for fair to prime reds, and 140@144c for white. Rye—Pennsylvania is selling, on arrival, at 92c, and but little offering. Corn is dull; 5 &0 bus new yellow sold at 68@70c for damp and prime dry lots, mostly at the latter rate, afloat; 1 500 bushels old sold at 90c, afloat. Oats are unchanged; about 3,000 bus sold at 41@43c for Delaware, and Penna in small lots at 44c. Bark—A small sale of first No 1 Quercitron was made at $28, at which rate it is in fair demand. Cotton—The market is quiet, and about the usual business doing at previous quoted rates. Groceries are unchanged; we have only to notice some further sales of Coffee and Sugar at full prices. Provisions—There is very little doing and prices are the same. Seeds—There is very little Cloverseed offering or selling, and prices range at $5 @ 5 25 for common to prime. Whiskey is steady; 200 bbls Ohio sold at 27c 27½c, 100 bbls Pennsylvania at 27c, drudge 25c, and bbds 26c per gallon.
