DE GUINON'S Improved Non-Explosive Camphene Lamps. HAVING PURCHASED THE right for the above LAMP in the counties of ALLEGHENY, BEAVER, WASHINGTON, FAYETTE, and GREENE, we are prepared to furnish Lamps, or sell rights for a reasonable price. These Lamps are so constructed as to render explosion impossible, and the public may rest assured that they may be used with entire safety. They also give more brilliant light, and the materials used, being cheaper than the "Lard Oil," or oils of any kind, they must come into general use. We also have LANTERNS and CANS on the non-explosive principle.

RECOMMENDATIONS. This certifies that we have seen, examined and tried, De Guinon's Improved Non-Exploding Camphene Lamp, patented January 6th, 1852, and are fully satisfied that it is a very valuable improvement, and will be found far preferable to any other Lamp in use. We believe the Lamp to be perfectly reliable, and therefore deem it richly deserving the attention of all such as have occasion to use Lamps of any kind.

Agricultural.

WHEN TO HARVEST GRAIN.

Wheat should be cut before the berry is fully ripe. It makes more flour, whiter, and of better quality, than if permitted to stand until the kernel becomes dry and hard. There is also much less loss by the shelling of the grain in harvesting. What we have said of wheat applies equally to rye, and the difference of the same crop when harvested early and harvested late is astonishing.

We speak from experience, from careful experiments of our own.

Grain should be cut while yet in the milk, if you want the whitest flour, the sweetest flour, and the largest quantity which can be made from it.

WHEN TO CUT GRASS.

A wide difference of opinion prevails as to what is the proper time for cutting grass.

Low, swamp grass is much better when cut quite young. But it is found that too early cutting nearly destroys the crop for the next year. However, it is worth but little at any rate.

In regard to timothy and other upland grasses, it is now pretty well settled amongst those who have paid most attention to the investigation of the subject, that these grasses make much better hay, and more of it, if cut before they are fully ripe.

HOW TO CURE CLOVER.

Cut it when in full bloom, let it wilt in the sun, then put it into large cocks and let it stand, rain or shine, until it is thoroughly cured.

When clover is made in this way, the stems seem to absorb the sweetness which they lose in the sun; they are much less brittle, and the leaves adhere to the stem better than when dried in the sun.

The clover may turn black, but do not be alarmed at that. Horses and cows will eat it much more readily, and it will be found to keep them in much better condition, when made in the shade, though it turn black as a shoe, than when dried entirely in a burning sun.

On this subject, as well as in regard to grain, we speak from ample personal experience.

IS THE FIRST MILK POISON.

A friend informs us that Mr. H. B. Wyman, of Sidney, lost a valuable sow not long ago, and asks if it invariably causes such trouble if hogs are fed on it? We believe that it does. We one year gave some such milk to a sow that was with pig. It made her sick, and she cast her pigs before her time, all of which were dead. We were told that such would be the result if we fed her with it. The next year we fed it to another, under the same circumstance, and the result was the same—all the pigs being dead. We found that rather costly experimenting, and have never tried it again. Last spring, one of our neighbors, who had a very fine sow, fed her with a pretty generous portion of such milk; she immediately became sick, and came near dying.—Maine Farmer.

CULTIVATION OF THE FLAX.

The war between Russia and the Western Powers in Europe, will completely interrupt the usual exports of flax and flax seed from Riga and Odessa—the ports from which large supplies are usually drawn—while the Mediterranean and Dutch supply must also be very uncertain, from the risk threatened to shipping by Russian cruisers. Already the price of these commodities has been seriously affected by the war. Flax seed is now worth about two dollars per bushel in New York—the general price being about 75 cents—and flax and hemp are also very high. Our farmers who have been far-seeing enough to sow flax this spring, will reap an ample return, and we have little doubt for the following harvest, (1855,) and perhaps for several years, flax will be among the most remunerative crops. Besides the high price certain to be obtained for good, well saved seed in any quantity, another inducement to grow flax is the fact that the straw can be sold to good advantage in New York and the Eastern States, where formerly it was scarcely worth saving. In Holland and in Ireland, the flax straw from an acre brings the producer an average return of $40 to $60, and when the quality is very fine, even as high as $100 or $150; and this in ordinary times, and of course there will now be a large increase in value, when the price of twelve bushels of seed per acre is added to the above, the growers here can calculate the return that foreigners obtain from a crop which is almost neglected with us. Why should this be? We have every variety of soil and climate; we have men capable of studying out the means by which good crops are obtained abroad, and what more is required?

Our export of seed was very considerable some years ago, but the trade has been lost in consequence of carelessness in the growth, and—it is said—dishonesty in measurement. We now import from the East Indies, and other parts, between two and three million bushels of flax seed yearly, to be consumed by oil-crushers, who again export the oil-cake to England, where a high price is obtained from the stock breeders, who appreciate its highly nutritive qualities.

There is no reason why we should not grow all this seed at home, and be large exporters besides, if we rightly set about the improvement of our crop. Nor do we see why it would not pay to bale up our flax straw, (tightly as we do hay,) and ship it to the spinning mills of Europe, so long as our home manufacture cannot consume all we grow. Before we can do this, however, we must vastly improve the growth and mode of preparation for market, which has hitherto been done in a truly slovenly manner. We are glad to hear from our friend at Waterloo, N. Y., that flax-dressing machinery is in operation in that State, and we hope to see much attention directed to this important matter. We expect to have something to say about improved machinery in our next. Meantime, we solicit information on this subject from all who are able to impart it.—American Agriculturist.

The True Merchant.

Concerning ancient Tyre, it is said in Holy Writ, that "her merchants were princes." We cannot believe, that the phrase referred to their great opulence, their magnificent edifices, or the grandeur of of their social state. We are confident it included also certain mental and moral characteristics, such as comprehensiveness of thought and liberality of feeling, magnanimity and integrity—qualities that should at least mark those exalted to the princely state.

We believe that it can be truly said of the commercial class in all ages and countries, from the Tyrian era until now, that many of the members have been "princely." We are sure, from personal knowledge, that the affirmation would be true of very many of our American merchants. For in all grand objects of public welfare, in all the multiform departments of benevolence and cosmopolitan philanthrophy, whenever and wherever their purses, their labors or their influences could do aught towards brightening the darkness of the human lot, they have ever been found prompt and forward to give and to do their utmost ability.

All these things are pleasant to note and to dwell upon. But there is one fact concerning this class of citizens, which we feel a still higher delight in recording. It is no uncommon event—indeed many such instances have come to our knowledge—for those who, through calamities caused by no fault of their own, have become bankrupt, have surrendered their remaining assets and received from their creditors a full discharge, yet have paid us the entire principal and interest of their remitted, obsolete debts, when, in after days, business prosperity has again visited them. It is the hearing of such an instance in one of our Philadelphia merchants which has suggested to us these remarks.

An act of this kind especially delights us, as it shows the internal and pervading quality of the agent to be of a high and noble and peculiarly trustworthy nature. He is not the mere creature of outward conventional laws and usages. He is a law unto himself, or more strictly, he is governed by Divine Law, "do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Such a man is a centre of light and of elevating influences to the community; and when we consider how numerous are the persons with whom a merchant of large business must come in close contact, whether as his employers in various grades, his customers, his friends, or his casual acquaintances, we can readily perceive how important a bearing on the welfare of society must be exercised by his character, and when his character is such, as above intimated, who does not see that he wields an influence for good, whose extent and value are not easily calculated.—*Com.
