WARRANTED to be thoroughly built, and to work well; made and sold by BASTIAN & CARROL, opposite Shoenberger's Rolling Mill, 463, Penn street, Pittsburgh. The Thrashing Machines are beautiful, simple and compact, are easily removed from place to place, and may be used with equal convenience in barn or field. No machine runs lighter, thrashes faster, or makes better work. More than 9,000 of them are now in use in the Western States, and as many East of the Mountains. Many of them have thrashed from 50 to 100,000 bushels each; and, on thorough trial, they have been recommended by those who use them, to be as complete, and to work as well as any in the world. The Separator is Root's Patent, with Bastian's improvements, and is attached to the Thrasher, and completely separates the straw and chaff from the grain, and has given entire satisfaction whenever tried. N. B.—The Machines warranted to work well, or no sale. ap29d&wly

SIMES' PHILA. FRUIT DROPS—A new and delicious confection possessing the flavor of the following different fruits: pine apple, strawberry, raspberry, banana, vanilla, orange, lemon, apple, ginger, jargonelle, pear, &c., &c. These drops are rendered slightly acidulous with pure lemon juice and are, both refreshing and invigorating to the tips, in which they represent. They may be conveniently employed in colds, sore throat, or any inflammatory complaint, or to cover the taste of disagreeable medicines. Simes' Fruit drops are quite distinguished from all others by the purity and sweetness of the fruit essences, and by the freedom from poisonous color or mineral acid and by their superior flavor. A WONDERFUL MOTIVE POWER.

We have, from time to time, noticed—with some misgivings as to its final success—a new motive power, invented in New York—heated air being used instead of steam. By the following article the reader will see that the invention has been thoroughly tried, and that a large ship is building on the new principle. If some one will build caloric boats on our western waters, to take the place of steam boats, they will confer a great favor on humanity. The awful sacrifice of life within the last few months, by steam explosions on western rivers, calls for some better way of propelling boats, if one can be found.

THE CALORIC SHIP ERICSSON.

The editor of the Boston Evening Transcript gives the following account of this enterprise, in his journal, after a personal visit to the works in New York, where the machinery for the new caloric ship is being built, and where also a sixty horse power trial engine is in operation on this new principle for the production of motive power.

"The idea of substituting a new and superior motive power for steam, will no doubt strike many minds as extravagant if not chimerical. We have been so accustomed to regard steam as the ne plus ultra of attainment in subjecting the modified force of nature to the service of man, that a discovery which promises to supercede this agency, will have to contend with the most formidable preconceptions as well as with gigantic interests. Nevertheless, it may now be predicted with confidence that we are on the eve of another great revolution, produced by the application of an agent more economical and incalculably safer than steam. A few years hence we shall hear of 'the wonders of caloric,' instead of 'the wonders of steam.' To the question, 'How did you cross the Atlantic?' the reply will be, 'By caloric, of course!'

"On Saturday I visited the manufactory, and had the privilege of inspecting Ericsson's caloric engine of sixty horse power, while it was in operation. It consists of two pair of cylinders, the working pistons of which are seventy-two inches in diameter. Its great peculiarities consist in its very large cylinders and pistons, working with very low pressure; and in the absence of boilers or heaters, there being no other fires employed than those in small grates under the bottoms of the working cylinders. During the eight months that this test engine has been in operation, not a cent has been expended for repairs or accidents. It is a beautiful and imposing object, and conveys the idea of power and symmetry much more impressively than the largest steam engine that I have ever seen.

"The leading principle of the caloric engine consists in producing motive power by the employment of the expansive force of atmospheric air, instead of that of steam; the force being produced by compression of the air in one part of the machine, and by its dilation by the application of heat in another part. This dilation, however, is not effected by continuous application of combustibles, but by a peculiar process of transfer, by which the caloric is made to act over and over again, viz: the heat of the air escaping from the working cylinder at each successive stroke of the engine is transferred to the cold, compressed air entering the same, so that in fact a continued application of fuel is only necessary in order to make good the losses of heat occasioned by the unavoidable radiation of the heated parts of the machine.

"The obvious advantages of this improvement are the great saving of fuel and of labor in the management of the engine, and its perfect safety. A ship carrying the amount of coal that the Atlantic steamers now take for a single trip, could cross or recross the Atlantic twice without taking in coal; and the voyage to China or California could be easily accomplished by a caloric ship without the necessity of stopping at any port to take in fuel. Anthracite coal being far the best fuel for this new engine, we shall no longer have to purchase bituminous coal in England for return trips. On the contrary, England will find it advantageous to come to us for our anthracite. A slow radiating fire, without flame, is what is required, and this is the best supplied by our anthracite. There being no smoke, a short pipe to carry off the carbonic oxide gas and other products of combustion, is all that is needed.

"But the great advantage of this important improvement, and that which, in the absence of any other advantages, would command its adoption, is the entire safety of the engine—an explosion being impossible. In steam engines, if the water gets low, or if there is an excess of pressure, or any defect in the materials of which the boiler is composed, or overheating of the furnace tops, occasioned by incrustation formed by salt, in marine boilers, &c., an explosion is inevitable. But in the caloric engine, the only result from neglect will be the stoppage of the engine. The present test engine shows that there must be a neglect to put in fuel for three hours before the speed is even slackened. Thus you have nothing to fear from a sleepy engineer or an ambitious captain; and all the while not one quarter the amount of attendance and labor is required which is needed to keep a steam engine in motion. When we consider the amount of human mutilation, suffering and loss, which will be prevented for a century to come, when this invention shall have passed into general use, surely every philanthropist will bid God speed to this new motive engine.

"A caloric ship, of 2,200 tons, to be called the Ericsson, is now in process of construction, and is in such a state of forwardness that she will be in frames by the end of next week. She is a very beautiful model, and is the admiration of all ship builders for her remarkable strength, being admitted to have the strongest bottom of any ship built in New York. The machinery is more than half completed. I saw three out of four working cylinders, the paddle wheels, all the valves and valve chests, the main links and connecting rods, the bed plates, and main pillar blocks—and various other parts of the engines—all of them massive forms of metal, cast with the utmost precision and smoothness, and the castings pronounced by competent judges to be superior to the best in the British steamers. The cylinders are 168 inches in diameter—72 inches larger than those in the Collins steamers. The Ericsson will be ready for sea by October next; and her owners intend to take passengers at a reduced price, in consequence of the reduced expenses under the new principle. The ship belongs to Mr. John B. Kitching, and a few other wealthy men. The Ericsson will be commanded by Captain Lowber."

AMERICAN IRON.

Our Country, they say, is prosperous; and it certainly is largely blessed by nature, has an intelligent and energetic population, and is very rich in promises to pay and tolerably flush of money, so long as its foreign creditors do not ask it to call and settle. We have more gold than ever before, and a prospect of still augmenting our pile, so long as our creditors see fit to let us. New enterprises are daily planned; and, our long, hard winter being at length over, and our fields inviting the plow, there is an active demand for Labor throughout the Country, which we trust will soon relieve the cities of their plethora of idlers who would gladly be workers. Superficially, we seem an dare generally presumed to be on the highway to unprecedented industrial activity and general prosperity.

But there is a black shadow to this bright foreground, in the condition and prospects of many branches of our Manufactures, and especially the production of Iron. In the face of general activity, factory after factory is deserted shut up; furnace after furnace is blown out and surrendered to assignees or to the sheriff. And it is but now that we have heard, that most of the few works which have hitherto been kept in operation in New Jersey are to be closed and given up during the present season—some of them within the next thirty days. And these are no rash and crude experiments, commenced without capital or requisite knowledge, but works which, with ample means and under prudent management, have been kept in motion through every change of circumstances for many years.

The losses of the proprietors or operators of such works must be severe, and we think most unmerited; but they are a few scores, with other capacities or resources; while the workers under them are numbered by thousands, and their loss is almost irreparable. Men who have earned $10 to $25 per week at the only business they thoroughly understand will often find it impossible to earn half as much, a third, or indeed any thing, when that business is thoroughly destroyed. Their families, after years of comfort and practical independence, will be reduced to precarious shifts or absolute need; and the farmers, who have found advantageous markets at the furnaces, will feel the difference when their late customers shall have been gradually forced into the position of competitors.

Shall nothing be done to prevent the complete prostration of our Iron interest? Outside of President-making, we expect nothing from the present Congress; but can the Iron-makers do nothing for themselves? Suppose it conceded that they can never recover, unaided, the ground which has been wrested from them, piece by piece, during the last five years, may they not do something towards arresting the tide of desolation where it now is, and thus awaiting the result of an appeal to the people? We do not believe the country wills or intends the destruction of the American Iron interest; we are confident that a majority would rather uphold it.—Northern New York is anti-Whig, yet avows itself for protection to iron; so says the Democratic Legislature of New Jersey; so say many of like affinities in Pennsylvania; so says Col. Benton in Missouri. Then let none give way to despair. A worse Congress than the present is hardly possible; a better one as its successor is highly probable. Let all who can hold on!

But we would not rely wholly or mainly on Congress; we believe there is help nearer at hand. Men who know far more of Iron than we ever expect to, assure us that there are processes within the reach of our ironmasters which, even now, would greatly improve the condition of the business. Especially in the matter of mixing ores to better the quality of the iron are we assured that great improvements are immediately practicable. Are the ironmasters looking into this?

Necessity is the mother of Invention. Seasons of adversity, trial, and privation teach many valuable truths, which in prosperity were overlooked or forgotten. May it be thus with the iron interest in its present depression! If our iron men would hold a meeting once a month, as we think they ought, adjourning from New York to Philadelphia, thence to Harrisburgh, Reading, Wilkesbarre, or Pittsburgh, and so to Baltimore, Cumberland, and even farther west, each master readily imparting all that experience may have taught him and receiving suggestions in return, we are confident that great advantages and economies would be realized, and perhaps the iron business saved from the fate now so palpably impending.

Especially to this matter of mixing ores do we trust that attention will be speedily and generally drawn. In England, very little good iron is made from a single ore, but different beds are blended to combine the qualities needed; and especially to give that fibrous toughness which distinguishes good iron from most other metals. Here the opposite course is quite common—indeed almost universal. How much good might be accomplished by a judicious mixing of ores, we cannot pretend to say, but we hear vaguely of most beneficial results thus attained. But we have no reason to suppose that the best mixtures have yet been made. If five or ten per cent of a particular ore will (as is reported) give a metal worth $40 ℘ ton from an ore which by itself would not yield a metal worth $30, there is no probability that this is the only, nor even the happiest, combination of ores which careful and patient experiments will suggest. We entreat the iron men to assemble, not once only but statedly, compare notes and institute inquiries in the premises, resolved that iron shall continue to be extensively made in this country, if there be means of securing that result within the reach of human power.—N. Y. Tribune.
