Reese's Patent Coupling and Foreplate,

FOR NAIL-PLATE AND SHEET-ROLLS,

CAN NOW BE SEEN IN OPERATION at Messrs Baily, Brown & Co.'s Rolling Mill, Pittsburgh, or the "Sharon Works," Mercer county, Pa. The advantages of my improvement are—that it obviates the necessity of stopping the engine or throwing off the crab to connect and disconnect the top roll; the top roll is connected and disconnected in an instant without respect to the engine, crab or anything else. The FOREPLATE is also constructed so simple and complete that it is placed or displaced in half a minute, without removing a guide, scraper, bolt, or nut. The last, though not least advantage of my improvement is, that by it you are enabled to secure the Rolls between heats, thus making a higher polish on Nail-plate and Sheet-iron than has ever been got before. Further information, or a right to use the same, can be obtained of the inventor. JACOB REESE, Manager of "Clinton Mills," Pittsburgh.

Having received the appointment as Agent in Pittsburgh and vicinity, of the Ætna Insurance Company, lately held by R. H. Beeson, I take pleasure in calling the attention of its former patrons my friends and the public, that I am prepared to issue Policies or renewals of them, at fair rates of premium, on risks of the various descriptions of buildings, merchandise, mills, machinery, and all risks, needing the security of Insurance from loss or damage by fire. The Ætna Company is one that recommends itself to the community from its proverbial fairness and promptitude, not only in taking of risks, but in the adjustment and payment of its losses. It does not profess to much to give cheap insurance as it does promise valuable indemnity.

REPLY TO THE TURKISH SUMMONS.

PREPARATIONS FOR HOSTILITIES.

The Eastern question continues unchanged in its aspect. Below we publish the material portion of the Turkish Declaration of War, which is said to have been made known by Omar Pasha to the Russian commander in a brief and soldier-like letter, notifying him that on the 25th inst at the latest, the state of war would commence. The Czar, on his part, had declared that the war should be a war of extermination. Meantime, the French and English negotiators think that their diplomacy will serve to confine the war to the Turkish frontier, without extending to general Europe. Austria and Prussia declare their neutrality in the coming struggle.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—A private despatch states that when the Czar read the Turkish declaration of war, he fell into a fury, and declared that he retracted every concession he had made, and that nothing now remained for him but a war of extermination against the Turks.

The following is a translation of the material portion of the Turkish Declaration of War.

"In the present state of circumstances, it would be superfluous to take up from its very commencement, the explanation of the difference which has arisen between the Sublime Porte and Russia, to enter anew into the detail of diverse phases which this difference has gone through, or to reproduce the opinions and judgments of the government of his Majesty the Sultan, which have been made public by the official documents promulgated from time to time.

As to the non adoption of the Vienna note in its pure and simple form by the Sublime Porte, it is to be remarked that this project, although not in every point conformed to the note of Prince Menschikoff, and while containing, it is true, in its composition, some of the paragraphs of the draught note of the Sublime Porte, is not as a whole, whether in letter or spirit, essentially different from that of Prince Menschikoff.

The assurances recently given by the representatives of the Great Powers respecting the apprehended danger from hurtful interpretations of the draught note in question, are a new proof of the kind intentions of their respective governments towards the Sublime Porte. They have consequently produced a lively satisfaction on the part of the government of his Majesty the Sultan.

It must be remarked, however, that while we have still before our eyes a strife of religious privileges raised by Russia, which seeks to base its claims on a paragraph so clear and so precise in the treaty of Kainardji; which wishes to insert in a diplomatic document the paragraph concerning the active solicitude of the Emperor of Russia for the maintenance in the States of the Sublime Porte of religious immunities and privileges which were granted (octroyes) to the Greek rite by the Ottoman Emperors before Russia so much as existed as an Empire, to leave in a dark and doubtful state the absence of all relation between these privileges and the treaty of Kutschuk Kainardji, to employ in favor of a great community of subjects of the Sublime Porte professing the Greek religion expressions which might make allusions to treaties concluded with France and Austria, relative to the French and Latin religions, this would be to incur the risk of placing in the hands of Russia vague and obscure paragraphs, some of which are contrary to the reality of facts, and would offer to Russia a solid pretext for her pretensions to a religious surveillance and protectorate—pretensions which that Power would attempt to produce, affirming that they are not derogatory to the sovereignty and independence of the Sublime Porte.

The very language of the employes and agents of Russia, who have declared that the intention of the government was no other than to fulfil the office of an advocate with the Sublime Porte, whenever acts contrary to existing privileges might be done, is a patent proof of the justice of the opinion of the Ottoman government.

If the government of his Majesty the Sultan has judged it necessary to require that assurances should be given, even if the modifications which it introduced by it into the Vienna note were adopted, how in conscience could it be tranquil if the note were to be retained in its integrity and without modification? The Sublime Porte, in accepting that which it has declared to all the world it could not admit without being compelled thereto, would compromise its dignity in view with the other Powers, would sacrifice its honor in the eyes of its own subjects, and would commit a mental and moral suicide.

In spite of the desire not to recite the urgent reasons which determined the modifications introduced by the Sublime Porte into the draft of the note prepared at Vienna (motives exposed previously in a note explanatory of the modifications), yet new solicitations having been made for the adoption, pure and simple, of the said note, in consequence of the non-adhesion of Russia to these same modifications, the Ottoman Government, finding itself at present compelled and forced to undertake war, thinks it a duty to give an exposition of the imperious reasons for that important determination, as well as for those which have obliged it not to regulate this line its conduct according to the counsels of the Great Powers its allies, although it has never ceased to appreciate the benevolent nature of their suggestions.

The principal points to which the government of his Majesty the Sultan desires to give prominence are these:—That from the very beginning his conduct has furnished no motive of quarrel, and that, animated with the desire of preserving peace, he has acted with a remarkable spirit of moderation and conciliation, from the commencement of the difference unto the present time. It is easy to prove these facts to all who do not wander from the path of justice and equity.

Although the refusal of Russia to accord the modifications required by the Sublime Porte has been based on a question of honor, it cannot be denied that the ground of that refusal was simply and solely its desire not to allow explicit terms to replace vague expressions, which might at some future time furnish it with a pretext for intermeddling. Such conduct, therefore, compels the Sublime Porte to persist, on its part in withholding its adhesion.

The reasons which have determined the Ottoman Government to make its modifications having been appreciated by the representatives of the Four Powers, it proved that the Sublime Porte was right in not purely and simply adopting the Vienna note. It is not with a view of criticising a project which obtained the assent of the great Powers that we enter upon a discussion of the inconveniences which the Vienna note presents. Their efforts have always tended to the preservation of peace, while defending the rights and independence of the Imperial Government. The endeavors made to attain these objects having been as laudable as can be conceived, the Sublime Porte cannot sufficiently acknowledge them. But, as evidently each government must possess, in consequence of its peculiar knowledge and its local experience, more facilities than any other government for judging of the points which concern its own rights, the examination which the Ottoman Government makes, is prompted entirely by its desire to justify the obligatory situation in which, to its great regret, it finds itself placed, desiring, as it has done, to continue following the benevolent counsels offered to it by its allies ever since the commencement of the differences, and which until now it has followed.

If it is alleged that the haste with which the Vienna note was drawn up, results from the backwardness of the Sublime Porte to propose an arrangement, the Government of his Majesty the Sultan must justify itself by stating the following facts:—

Before the entrance of the Russian troops into the two Principalities, some of the representatives of the Powers, actuated by the sincere intention of preventing the occupation of these provinces, urged upon the Sublime Porte the necessity of framing a draft note occupying a middle place between the draft note of the Sublime Porte and that of Prince Menschikoff. More lately the representatives of the Powers confidently communicated different schemes of arrangement to the Sublime Porte.

None of these latter responded to the views of the Imperial government; and the Ottoman Cabinet was on the point of entering into negociation with the representatives of the Powers on the basis of a project drawn up by itself in conformity with these suggestions. It was at this moment that news of the passage of the Pruth by the Russians arrived—a fact which changed the face of the whole question. The draught note proposed by the Sublime Porte was then set aside, and the cabinets were requested to express their views of this violation of treaties after the protest of the Sublime Porte. On the one hand, the Ottoman Cabinet had to wait for their replies, and on the other it drew up, at the suggestion of the representatives of the Powers, a project of arrangements, which was sent to Vienna.

As the sole answer to all these active steps, the draft of our note prepared (elabore) at Vienna made its appearance.

However that may be (Quoiqu'il en soit) the Ottoman government fearing rightly (à juste tico) everything which might imply a right of interference in favor of Russia in religious matters, could do no more than give assurances calculated to dissipate the doubts which had become the subject of discussion; and it will not, after so many preparations and sacrifices, accept propositions which could not be received at the time of the stay of Prince Menschikoff at Constantinople.

Since the cabinet of St. Petersburgh has not been content with the assurances and pledges that have been offered, since the benevolent efforts of the high Powers have remained fruitless, since, in fine, the Sublime Port cannot tolerate or suffer any longer the actual state of things, or the prolongation of the occupation of the Moldo Wallachian Principalities, they being integral portions of its empire—the Ottoman cabinet, with the firm and praiseworthy intention of defending the sacred rights of sovereignty and the independence of its government, will employ just reprisals against a violation of the treaties which it considers a casus belli. It notifies, them, officially, that the government of his Majesty the Sultan finds itself obliged to declare war, that it has given most precise instructions (les instructions les plus categoriques) to his Excellency Omar Pacha to demand from Prince Gortschakoff the evacuation of the Pincipalities, and to commence hostilities if, after a delay of fifteen days from the arrival of his dispatch at the Russian head quarters, an answer in the negative should be returned.

It is distinctly understood that should the reply of Prince Gortschakoff be negative, the Russian agents are to quit the Ottoman States, and that the commercial relations of the respective subjects of the two governments shall be broken off.

At the same time the Sublime Porte will not consider it just to lay an embargo upon Russian merchant vessels, as has been the practice. Consequently, they will be warned to resort either to the Black Sea or to the Mediterranean Sea, as they shall think fit, within a term that shall hereafter be fixed. Moreover, the Ottoman government being unwilling to place hindrances in the way of commercial intercourse between the subjects of friendly powers, will during the war leave the Straits open to their mercantile marine.

The Porte has further addressed a manifesto to the four Powers, but it had not been published. As Iskander Bey, aid-de-camp to Omar Pacha, was in Paris, charged with a special private mission to the Cabinets of France and England, he was probably bearer of the manifesto.

The usual mail steamer from Constantinople, October 5th, had arrived at Marseilles, and reported from Besika Bay that the fleets were preparing to enter the Dardanelles. Admiral Dundas had sent his wife home to England, out of the way of danger.

On the 3d instant the Russian fleet arrived at Odessa from Sebastopol, to embark troops, as was believed, for Redoutkale.

The Paris Siecle states that France and England have sent a joint note to Russia, demanding the immediate evacuation of the Principalities, as a preliminary measure, before they will enter on the mediation which they are still willing to undertake.

Letters by way of Vienna state positively, that Marshal Paskiewitsch is appointed to command of the army in the Principalities. They add that the Marshal had already left for the Danube, and was probably at headquarters. Gortschakoff was only chief of the staff. Paskiewitsch is about 76 years of age, and is known for his campaigns in Poland and Persia. It was also stated that the Turks intended commencing hostilities in the direction of the Black Sea, and in Georgia. The Russians have about 80,000 men in those parts.

Omar Pasha is stated to have written to the government offering to cross the Danube and force the Russians from their position, if 50,000 more men be given him. Notwithstanding this, it was considered doubtful if hostilities would commence on the Danube this winter, as neither commander would choose to have such a river in his rear. The Russians are posted in three strong bodies, so that they might attempt to cross the river simultaneously at three points.

On the 28th ult., Schamyl issued from the mountains with his forces, and broke into the Russian district of Dscharo, Bielokanak, where he made an attack on the fortress of Vovjekatal. Gen. Orbelian marched with three battalions of infantry, sixty guns, and some cavalry to meet the mountaineers, and, after hard fighting, which lasted till nightfall, succeeded in driving them back. The Russian statement, from which this account is taken, says that the loss of the Circassians, was considerable, and that the Russians themselves, lost two staff officers, three field officers, and sixty-one men. Schamyl was expected by the Turks to do good service in their aid. The reports that the Schah of Persia had agreed to assist the Russians is again strongly contradicted, and the counter statement is made that the Persian forces are to aid the Turks.

The Turkish force in Bulgaria now numbers 110,000 men.

BRITAIN.—There was a great talk that a special meeting of Parliament would be summoned for the dispatch of "urgent and important business," but as the Houses stood prorogued till 27th instant, it seemed unlikely that the country would be alarmed by summoning the Legislature earlier than that date.

With respect to the intention of Government as to the part England will play in the present Eastern crisis, the true state of the case is, that the public have no information whatever, beyond what they glean from the conflicting statements of the London papers.

The mail steamships Tay, from the Brazils, and Iberia, from the Mediterranean, arrived at Southampton 15th. The latter brought six shipwrecked sailors from the American barque Henry Herbeck, which foundered at sea, Sept. 13th, in latitude 88 north, longitude 56 west, when bound from Cardiff to New York, with railroad iron. These men were taken from a raft by the Spanish steamer Velasco, from Havana to Vigo, where they were landed, and whence they were brought by the Iberia. These unfortunate sailors, together with the rest of the crew, and one woman and child, were on the raft from 13th to 17th, exposed to severe weather, and with only a five gallon keg of water, and part of a ham as their whole stock of provisions, the allowance of each being but one ounce of meat and one gill of water per day. The American consul took charge of the above six seamen, who were American citizens.

Forty passengers, from the wreck of the Ann Jane, had arrived at Glasgow. The remainder, with Capt. Mason, still remain at Barra.

FRANCE.—We are without further intelligence of the proposed action of France in the East.—Our correspondence from Paris and Havre states that the hope prevailed that hostilities between the Russians and Turks would be of a nature easily reconcilable, or would not, at least, affect the general peace of Europe. The impression, apparently well founded, that Prussia and Austria will keep themselves aloof from the difficulty, materially strengthened this belief, and tended to quiet the public mind.

Although no troops had been ordered to embark, or other public manifestation made, the greatest activity prevailed in the navy yards.—Orders had been given for the immediate armament, in case of necessity, of the frigates Le Vauban, Descartes, Asmodie, Cacique, Montezuma, and Panama. The frigate Labrador had sailed from Toulon, with 750 additional seamen to be distributed among the French ships. Every thing indicates that France means to distinguish herself in the coming war. And it is not forgotten that Louis Napoleon threatened to be revenged on the Czar for his tardy recognition both of his election to the Empire and of his marriage. In such matters Louis is a man of his word.

The Moniteur publishes an Imperial Decree, granting, until 31st July, 1854, to foreign vessels conveying corn, rice, potatoes and dried pulse from the Mediterranean, the same privilege in French ports as French vessels.

The statement that orders had been sent to embark troops at Toulon for the East is not correct, or, at least, premature.

PRUSSIA.—Prussia remains neutral.

Prussia's position in the present crisis was looked for not less anxiously than Austria's.—Prussia has decided for peace, and not for neutrality only, but for mediation as far as her position will admit, between the contending parties.

The Berlin Zeitung contains an important article on this subject, and which may be considered official. It says:

"If Prussia remains neutral, it cannot by any means be predicted of her that she thereby binds herself to a do-nothing course. Prussia's task, if we apprehend it rightly, is a mediative neutrality. The more Prussia holds herself aloof from an active participation in the existing differences, the less interest of her own she shows in the subject matter of these differences, with so much the more disinterestedness will she be able to raise her voice in mediation, and so much the better prospect there will be that her voice will be listened to."

AUSTRIA.—With the view of allaying the apprehension which had arisen respecting the dangers to be anticipated by Austria being drawn into a war, the Minister at War had announced that a reduction of the army would immediately take place, by means of an extensive system of furloughs. This reduction is, however, deceptive. Some time since, leave of absence was forbidden to all officers and soldiers, and the reduction is nothing more than a restoration of the furlough. Small as it is, it is accepted as an indication that Austria will remain neutral, if possible. The French papers so accept it. The Pays speaks the sentiments of its brethren when it says—"The reduction of the Austrian army at the present moment would be a symptom characteristic of the policy which the Court of Vienna proposes to follow. That policy appears to us clearly pointed out by the interests of Austria, and cannot be anything else than a loyal mediation or a vigorous neutrality. That also, in our opinion, is the position of Prussia, and the very
