Grand Union Rally in New York.

On Friday evening, Cooper Institute was filled to its utmost capacity by men of all parties, who assembled to take counsel together and form themselves into a Loyal Union League. Another large meeting was organized in the street out of the overflow. But the most notable feature of the meeting was the fact that JAMES T. BRADY, JOHN VAN BUREN, CHARLES P. DALY, and other leading men of the Democratic party, were found shoulder to shoulder with the leading Republicans of that city. The three gentlemen just named made strong and telling speeches. We must try and pick out a few extracts. Mr. BRADY, who is an Irishman, (although he said that for the sake of the Union he would agree to be called a Yankee,) after a brilliant opening, in which he made allusion to his posthumous fame, said:

I want to be distinguished by some lingering of affection in some heart that cleaves to the recollection of him who once was, as the grave of one whose country was the United States of America [loud cheers]. That is my country. I can admit of no other. There is no name to be substituted for that. There is no flag except ours that I can ever accept [cheers], no star to be taken out of it [cheers], no stripes to be stolen from it [cheers], stars to be added to it without number [cheers], stripes to be accumulated till the eye tires of looking at them; so that, with all the gallant history of its past and glorious associations of its present, however gloomy the prospect may appear to many, there shall be for us now and hereafter, one country, one constitution, one destiny [loud cheers]. I was dining with a friend to-day who read to me an extract from a newspaper—the Express. [Laughter and expression of disfavor.]—saying that this was a meeting of Abolitionists and that Brady would not be present. I am not certain that I am, for there is so much of individuality and spiritual power and tendency to great results in this chamber, charged with patriotism, that I am like nothing in this majestic presence. [Applause.] But so far as I am capable of knowing myself I am here—here with delight—here with pride. [Applause.] Although from the first time that I ever made a speech in public till now most of you have been opposed to me, as I well understand, in political sentiment, I thank God that it has been permitted me to be present on an occasion when any one human being would attach importance to my voice in saying that I stand up now, as I always have done, for the preservation of the Union and the Constitution of the country. [Loud cheers.]

We quote Mr. Brady again:

When this war broke out, I knew that it was urged on by the South. I hoped that it might terminate early; I hoped that my Southern countrymen—for such they are—would develop among them some desire to remain with us. I detected with regret that they had prepared means to make an assault upon a Union that they ought to love. I maintained silence in regard to it. You will excuse my egotism, but I now justify myself in my own presence. I found that they proposed to take to themselves Fort Sumter, the forts at Key West and Pensacola, Tortugas and Fortress Monroe. I thought it was quite essential to the dignity and prosperity of the country that we should retain those fortresses. I think so now. I did hope, however, that the Southern people would put their feet upon the necks of their leaders, and insist upon the maintenance of the Union. But they have informed us that they would consent to no such condition. They have told us that if we gave them a blank paper and pencil to write the terms of a new compact, they would not agree to it. Therefore it is a war declared for all ultimate results that can come; and I spit upon the Northern man who takes any position except for the maintenance of the Government. [Here almost the entire audience rose to their feet, waved their hats, and cheered vociferously for some moments.]

Here is a passage full of both truth and humor:

Now I tell my Southern brethren that their only chance is to let the Constitution be their guide, for if these Yankees once get down into that Southern territory, who have a theory about this war, and put arms into the hands of the negroes (loud cheering) and put up their long feet on the tables of the estates of which they take possession, I don't want to be the lawyer in an action of ejectment. [Great laughter and applause.] I sincerely believe that unless the gentlemen of the South will manifest some lingering remnant of attachment to the Union, and agree that the Constitution of the United States shall preserve us as one people in the territory that we occupy, the end of this war will be occupation; and Mr. Eli Thayer, whom I have never had the pleasure of seeing, in advance of me has illustrated the fact that whenever you show any place to the Yankee to go to, he goes there, and when he goes there he stays there, and when they propose to remove him they find it exceedingly difficult. [Cheers.] You will pardon me for relating an anecdote. A man in a hotel in New Orleans heard his friend in the next room, who was subject to night-mare, making a fearful noise. He went in and said, "Why you are in a dreadful state!" "Why, I am frightened," answered his friend, "I have had a dreadful dream!" "Did you dream of death?" "Worse than that." "Did you dream of the devil?" "Worse than that." "Well, then, what did you dream of?" "I thought I was back in the State of Maine!" [Great Laughter.] That class of people can never be defeated. I am sorry to say it, I am an unwilling witness, and I hope my Teutonic friends, to whom the first speaker alluded, will excuse me when I say that neither whisky, punch or lager beer will ever overcome those iconoclasts.

We are obliged to let Mr. Daly, a prominent Democrat, give his confession of faith in a very few words, but they are sufficiently emphatic. He said:

There are a number of men in the North at present who talk of peace, who talk of an armistice, who talk of concession, who hope for compromise, and who have no hope of the war. If persons of that temper of mind have made up their minds that the war is hopeless, and that the separation of the States is now inevitable, then their conduct and their declarations are consistent with their convictions; but for men who profess entertaining such convictions to be desirous for the restoration of the Union, for the preservation of the land in the territorial unity with which it was committed to us by our fathers—I say, if such men entertain that conviction, I have little belief in their wisdom, and if they have wisdom, I have doubt in their nationality. [Cheers.]

Hon. John Van Buren received a warm welcome, and held the attention of the audience for over an hour. He fully endorsed the object of the meeting and approved of the resolutions; went into a statement of his own position in reference to the questions which have been agitated, to show that, during the late election campaign for Governor, he had expressed his determination to sustain the President in a vigorous prosecution of the war; he adhered to that resolve, and saw nothing in the proclamation of the President, or in the acts passed by the last Congress, to alter that determination. He approved of the act giving the President full control of the purse and the sword, and cited a precedent in the act passed in 1839, on the occasion of the occupation of Maine by the British, when similar power was conferred, with full approval of the Democracy and of the nation at large. There was no outcry then against "extraordinary powers," nor should there be now, except by those who wanted to see the rebellion prosper, and the Federal Government weakened. In regard to the Proclamation he did not question its constitutionality, but doubted its utility. I am (said Mr. Van Buren) for a vigorous prosecution of the war. I am for a prosecution of the war until this rebellion is wholly overthrown. I am for destroying this usurped government that has been set over several States of this Union, known as the Confederate Government; and until that is done, I hold all propositions for peace to be entirely preposterous and absurd. [Applause, and cries of good!] Now, being for the war, I am necessarily with everybody that is for the war; and being opposed to peace, I am necessarily opposed to everybody that is for a peace." He reviewed the course of the leaders of the rebellion, and pronounced their conduct to be without the shadow of excuse. Every fair-minded man in the United States would bear in mind that, up to the moment of their withdrawal from the Union, not a hair of their heads had been injured; no right of any Southern man had been invaded. History would record that the world never heard of a rebellion against governmental authority before this, where the people who rebelled could not lay their finger upon a thing which showed that either their property, their liberty, or their laws had been in the slightest particular impaired.

What have our copperhead apologists for traitors to say to that?

The resolutions were very spirited, and were adopted with acclamation.

We give two as samples of the whole:

Resolved, That the conduct of disaffected persons, claiming to be citizens of the United States, yet zealous in their attempts to embarrass and impede the action of the legally constituted authorities, and in the utterance of treasonable sentiments, deserves, and should receive the condemnation of every loyal citizen.

Resolved, That this meeting, under solemn convictions of duty, and in a firm reliance on the justice of that Providence which guides and guards governments and peoples, does hereby resolve itself into a Loyal League of Union Citizens, pledged to an unconditional support of the Government in all its constitutional efforts to suppress the rebellion, and uncompromising opposition to treason in whatever form it appears.

It is said that a Norwegian naturalist has recently obtained living animals from depths in the ocean, near Spitzbergen, of more than a mile and a half. He appears to have used the same apparatus that was employed by Dr. Wallich, when the latter was with Capt. McClintock on the occasion of making a survey of the bed of the Atlantic.
