HOOFLAND'S COLUMN.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS
AND
HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC.
The Great Remedies for all Diseases of the LIVER, STOMACH, OR DIGESTIVE ORGANS.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS
Is composed of the pure juices, (or, as they are medicinally termed, Extracts,) of Roots, Herbs, and Barks, making a preparation, highly concentrated, and entirely free from alcoholic admixture of any kind.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC
Is a combination of all the ingredients of the Bitters, with the purest quality of Santa Cruz Rum, Orange, &c., making one of the most pleasant and agreeable remedies ever offered to the public.

Those preferring a medicine free from Alcoholic admixture, will use
HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

Those who have no objection to the combination of the Bitters, as stated, will use
HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC.

They are both equally good, and contain the same medicinal virtues, the choice between the two being a mere matter of taste, the Tonic being the most palatable.

The Stomach, from a variety of causes, such as Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, etc., is very apt to have its functions deranged and the Liver, sympathizing as it does with the Stomach, then becomes affected, the result of which is that the patient suffers from several or more of the following diseases:

Constipation, Flatulence, Inward Piles, Fulness of Blood to the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fulness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking, or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried or Difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a Lying Posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or Webs before the Sight, Dull Pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil, and Great Depression of Spirits.

The sufferer from these diseases should exercise the greatest caution in the selection of a remedy for his case, purchasing only that which he is assured from his investigations and inquiries, possesses true merit, is skillfully compounded, is free from injurious ingredients, and has established for itself a reputation for the cure of these diseases. In this connection we would submit those well-known remedies—

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS,
AND
HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC.
PREPARED BY DR. C. M. JACKSON,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Twenty-two years since they were first introduced into this country from Germany, during which time they have undoubtedly performed more cures, and benefited suffering humanity to a greater extent, than any other remedies known to the public.

These remedies will effectually cure Liver Complaint, Jaundice, Dyspepsia; Chronic Nervous Debility, Chronic Diarrhœa, or Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a Disordered Liver or Stomach.

DEBILITY,
Resulting from any Cause whatever: Prostration of the System, induced by Severe Labor, Hardships, Exposure, Fevers, &c.

There is no medicine extant equal to these remedies in such cases. A tone and vigor is imparted to the whole system, the appetite is strengthened, food is enjoyed, the stomach digests promptly, the blood is purified, the complexion becomes sound and healthy, the yellow tinge is eradicated from the eyes, a bloom is given to the cheeks, and the weak and nervous invalid becomes a strong and healthy being.

PERSONS ADVANCED IN LIFE,
And feeling the hand of time weighing heavily upon them, with all its attendant ills, will find in the use of this BITTERS, or the TONIC, an elixir that will instil new life into their veins, restore in a measure the energy and ardor of more youthful days, build up their shrunken forms, and give health and happiness to their remaining years.

NOTICE.

It is a well-established fact that fully one-half of the female population are seldom in the enjoyment of good health; or, to use their own expression, "Never feel well." They are languid, devoid of all energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite.

To this class of persons the BITTERS, or the TONIC, is especially recommended.

WEAK AND DELICATE CHILDREN
Are made strong by the use of either of these remedies. They will cure every case of MARASMUS, without fail.

Thousands of certificates have accumulated in the hands of the proprietors, but space will allow of the publication of but a few. Those, it will be observed, are men of note, and of such standing that they must be believed.

Testimonials.

HON. GEORGE W. WOODWARD,
Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, writes:
PHILADELPHIA, March 16, 1867.
"I find 'Hoofland's German Bitters' is a good tonic, useful in diseases of the digestive organs, and of great benefit in cases of debility and want of nervous action in the system.
"Yours truly,
GEO. W. WOODWARD."

HON. JAMES THOMPSON,
Judge of the Supreme Court of Penn'a.
PHILADELPHIA, April 28, 1866.
"I consider 'Hoofland's German Bitters' a valuable medicine in case of attacks of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. I can certify this from my experience of it.
"Yours, with respect,
"JAMES THOMPSON."

FROM REV. JOS. H. KENNARD, D. D., Pastor of the Tenth Baptist Church, Phila.
DR. JACKSON—Dear Sir: I have been frequently requested to connect my name with recommendations of different kinds of medicines, but regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all cases declined; but with a clear proof in various instances, and particularly in my own family, of the usefulness of Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, I depart for once from my usual course, to express my full conviction that, for general debility of the system, and especially for Liver Complaint, it is a safe and valuable preparation. In some cases it may fail; but usually, I doubt not, it will be very beneficial to those who suffer from the above causes. Yours, very respectfully,
J. H. KENNARD,
Eighth, below Coates St.

FROM REV. E. D. FENDALL,
Ass't Editor Christian Chronicle, Philada
I have derived decided benefit from the use of Hoofland's German Bitters, and feel it my privilege to recommend them as a most valuable tonic, to all who are suffering from general debility, or from disease arising from derangement of the liver.
Yours truly, E. D. FENDALL.

Original Poetry.

[For the SPY.]

A QUERIE.

"All Christians shall be as one family in Heaven."

BY VIOLA MAY.

If at last, in yon Realm—in that blessed abode,
All who love the dear Saviour shall dwell with him there,
In the Father's blest Mansion—the City of God,
"All that follow his Son, in his kingdom shall share."

I wonder what part, in the building on high
Our High-Church Episcopal brothers will dwell?
And our close-Baptist brothers, who now are so shy,
What apartment for them, pray, can any one tell?

Think you all known by sect will have separate fare,
Each Methodist, Dutchman, Presbyterian too,
All the Isms of earth that shall be gathered there,
Including at last o'en the Christianized Jew?

Now I think all must say, no matter what creed,
This distinction will be all set aside, there,
All those will be numbered who're Christians indeed,
One family, all, 'neath God's fatherly care.

If there all as Christians are seeking to win
The crown that's immortal, in yonder bright sky,
To shun, through life's journey, the pathway of sin,
And prepare, here on earth, for the Mansion on high;

If all those above will be called by one name,
If the sects shall all mingle together at last,
I think to each one it must seem very plain
That the time for Sect-bigotry-ism is past.

"By their works ye shall know them,"—thus saith The Book;
Where God makes his altar, shall man pass it by,
And show by the action, as well as the look—
I consider this brother less holy than I.

If in Union there's strength, if all be of one fold,
Let Love be your banner, go forth in your might;
Let the fire brightly burn that was kindled of old,
With Christ for your Captain, go forth to the fight!

Miscellaneous Reading.

F. W. S. "PERSONAL."

BY J. P. JARDINE.

"Those 'Personals' in the dailies," said Fred Winter to me, "ought to be put down by the police. To say nothing of their morality, they got me into one of the most unpleasant scrapes I was ever in in all my life. I am out of it now, thank Heaven! But if I had had the editor of one of the papers by the throat at the time, I would have made his wicked old bones rattle. Look here," he continued, taking a copy of a paper out of his desk, about two months old, "I have kept the confounded thing for reference now and then."

I read where he pointed as follows:

"F. W.—Fulton Ferry, Thursday morning, 10 o'clock." Arabella A.

"F. W.—Fulton Ferry, Thursday morning, 10 o'clock." Arabella A.

"Well, I suppose you did. I was going to Brooklyn on that very Thursday morning, with her sister, whom she was to meet at the Ferry at about ten o'clock. Mrs. W. got there a little before the time, and was waiting in the sitting-room for her sister, when a handsomely dressed young lady, with a veil over her face, which did not entirely conceal, or rather hightened a very pretty set of features, stepped up to her, and said, in a hurried and anxious voice:

"Have you been here long?"

"Not very," answered Mrs. Winter.

"Have you seen a gentleman, rather tall, with a heavy red mustache?"

"No, I have not," replied Fred's wife, rather shortly, for the description was, unpleasantly, like Fred.

The young lady turned away, evidently disappointed, and, just then, Mrs. Winter saw her sister (a fine girl, full of fun, and just as full of good sense), to whom she related the incident, as they walked to the boat.

"Oh!" said Kate, (that was the sister's name)—"this is very often a meeting place for he and she fools who advertise in the Personals."

"But, then, her description was so like Fred."

"Maybe," said Kate, "Fred is not the only tall young man, with a red mustache in New York.

"There is no maybe, about it," said Mrs. Winter.

"Kate, look there!"

And, as the boat was moving off, they saw Fred himself come through the gate. The young lady immediately ran up to him, and the two entered into conversation.

Now, Kate was a generous girl, and thought a great deal of Fred; and besides, she pitied the distress into which her sister was thrown. So she tried her best to comfort the one and defend the other.

The indignant little woman, however, refused to be comforted, and insisted upon trying a paper as soon as she reached the other side, in which, sure enough, they found the fatal "Personal," the time appointed, and the initials "F. W.," corroborating the other evidence, and convicting Fred, beyond the hope of defense.

Fred, however, was entirely innocent, though appearances were desperately against him.

He got into the scrape in this way: As soon as he arrived at his office that morning, he found his partner there before him, who said:

"Oh, Winter, here is a new case in the office this morning. So I think you had better go to Brooklyn, and attend to that reference, instead of me."

"Very well," said Fred. "Give me the papers."

And off he started.

He had no sooner got inside the Ferry gate, than he was astonished by finding a young lady almost throwing herself into his arms, at the same time seizing his hands, and exclaiming:

"Oh, Frank, I'm so glad you've come!"

"Now, Fred was a perfectly faithful husband, and I do not suppose entertained a thought that his wife would not approve. But, then, he was a man, and it was impossible for him not to feel exceedingly pleasant sensations under such agreeable circumstances; so he almost involuntarily put his hat a little more on one side of his head, gave his mustache an additional twist and threw just the slightest touch of sweetness in his voice, as he said:

"Excuse me, madam, but"—

But the lady had already discovered her mistake, and retreated in some confusion, and Fred had the satisfaction of finding that he had lost the boat. He had the additional satisfaction of seeing his wife and sister-in-law watching him from it.

Of course he felt very uncomfortable all that day. He was in hopes that his wife would have waited for him on the other side, and given him an opportunity to explain matters, but in this he was disappointed—no wife was there; and as he did not know which way she had gone, there was nothing for it but to wait till evening, with the uneasy assurance that there was a rod in pickle for him.

Fred's business all went crossways that day. The questions he asked, and the statements he made, were often unconnected, contradictory, and wide of the mark. He got through, however, somehow or another, just avoiding getting himself into more of a mess, and with feelings more peculiar than pleasant, wended his way homeward.

He opened the door and entered, but no wife met him as usual. He went from room to room, but she was in none of them. He called up the servant, from whom he learned that Mrs. Winter, had come home, and immediately gone to her father's.

Fred felt both disconcerted and vexed at this, but he proceeded, without delay, to follow his wife.

When he arrived at his father-in-law's house, he was shown into the parlor, where he found that worthy gentleman, who received him very coldly, and instead of his usual hearty—"Well, Fred, my boy," rose and said, very stiffly:

"Mr. Winter, I presume you are here to see my daughter. Let me beg you to observe that she is under the protection of my roof."

Fred replied with equal stiffness:

"Mr. Honeysuckle, let me beg you to observe that my wife was not at home, and I was directed here to find her. I respect, the sanctity of your roof; respect my claim upon my wife, and let me see her."

"I cannot refuse your claim, if I would," replied the father. "You are her husband, though a most unworthy one."

"Sir!" responded Fred, angrily; those words from any other man—"

"Tut! tut!" interrupted Mr. Honeysuckle, "do you think you can impose on me? I will send Emma to you. In the meantime, perhaps you can reconcile this with your virtuous indignation."

As he spoke, he pointed to the ominous words in the paper.

"F. W. Fulton Ferry, Thursday morning, 10 o'clock." Arabella A.

Fred was struck dumb with astonishment and dismay. Of course, he saw at a glance what a close corner he was in; and then followed a scene.

His wife entered the room with her sister, both looking daggers at him. Fred was completely disarmed by the surprise. His initials, his presence at the time and place appointed, the girl's question to his wife, and her evident recognition of Fred, were facts not to be got over. Fred made a miserable defense of himself, and the more he tried to explain matters, he only made them worse. At last he got downright angry, and, picking up his hat, rushed from the house, followed by the hysterical sobs of his wife, and the reproaches of her sister and father.

It so happened that as he ran down the stoop he came full split against a man running up. The violent collision knocked them over, and down they went, rolling over and over each other, until they landed on the sidewalk.

"Come on, sir!" cried Fred, fiercely, as soon as he could kick himself free, and almost dancing round the other. "I am just in the humor for you, or anybody else."

"What's the matter, Fred? what's the matter?" gasped the other party, as soon as he could recover his breath and his legs. "You must be in the devil of a hurry to knock a man down like that."

"Oh! is that you, Walker," said Fred, moodily. "I'm sorry I hurt you, but I didn't see you."

"Not much damage done, I guess," answered Walker, straightening his clothes, and knocking the dust off them, while Fred did the same, "but I wanted particularly to see you, and they told me at your house I would find you here, and I have found you here with a vengeance; that's a fact," he added, laughing.

"Here's Delmonico's," he continued, as they walked along. "Let's go in and sit down, and I'll tell you what I wanted to say to you."

"You know old Richankrustif," says Walker, when they were seated and supplied with what they wanted.

"Yes. Well, what of him?"

"What's the matter, Fred! You seem out of sorts to-night," said Walker, looking at him.

"Nothing nothing. Go on, Walker," answered Fred, leaning his head on his hand, and stirring up his drink.

"Well, we are engaged."

"Who? You and old Richaurustif."

"No, no, counfound him! I mean his daughter, Arabella, and myself. The old man is unreasonably opposed to the match, and had the impudence to tell me so. I expostulated with him, and told him that he ought to congratulate himself on the prospect of such a desirable son-in-law as myself—for I flatter myself, Fred, that in every way I am a suitable match for his daughter. However, the old man didn't see it. On the contrary, he had the bad manners to fly in a passion and forbid me the house. I have continued, notwithstanding, to see Arabella (splendid girl, Fred,) on several occasions, until lately, when the old man's vigilance cut off our communication entirely. This drove us to extremities, and we have determined to get married against his consent, and without his knowledge, if it must be so; and, Fred, I want your help in this matter. Arabella and I met this morning and arranged the whole affair. The manner and place of our interview was not very proper," continued Walker, smiling, "but then we couldn't help that."

Fred had been paying no great attention up to this moment, for he was full of his own troubles; but at this point a sudden idea seemed to flash upon him, for he excitedly interrupted his friend with the abrupt question,

"Frank Walker, did it ever occur to you that we resemble each other?"

"Certainly. I have been taken for you more than once."

"Yes, confound you! and I have been taken for you once too often. Did it ever likewise occur to you that the initials of our names were identical?"

"I don't know that it ever did," replied Walker, "though they certainly are. But what of that?"

"Wait a minute, wait a minute," said Fred, with increasing excitement. "There waiter," bring me to-day's ——"

When the paper was brought, Fred pointed to the unlucky advertisement, the cause of all his troubles, and then said—

"Walker, have you been fool enough to make love through such a channel as this?"

Walker looked both ashamed and surprised at this question, but he presently answered—

"I own, Fred, it is not a very creditable way of corresponding with any one, much less a lady whom you expect to make your wife; ours was a desperate case and called for a desperate remedy. But how on earth did you connect that thing with me?"

"Well," said Fred, brightening up, as he saw his way clear now out of his difficulty, "I will render you all the assistance in my power, old boy. Indeed, since I am already mixed up in your mess more than you think for, I may as well see it through."

Walker opened his eyes more and more.

"How do you mean mixed up in my mess?"

"You were to meet your Arabella at Fulton Ferry at ten o'clock," said Fred, referring to the advertisement. Isn't that so?"

"It is."

"Then why didn't you keep the appointment?"

"Fred, I give you my word, I hurried down to the ferry as fast as horse-flesh and my own legs could carry me, and I was there within five minutes of the time."

"Yes, sir, and that five minutes has kept me in hot water ever since. For I would have you to know that I happened to be crossing the ferry just at the time when you should have been there. In the hurry and crowd the lady mistook me for you; of course, I could not refuse to respond to the lady's advances, although they were mistaken, and then I had the extreme pleasure of losing the boat, and seeing my wife upon it, watching me talking to a strange wo
