DISHONEST TACTICS.

One of the worst effects of the Hawiian embroilment is the confusion it has produced in the moral perceptions of men There are two elements in it which pre-eminently have this tendency. One is that blind party spirit which stops at nothing to gain an advantage over the opposite party. The other is that inordinate ambition of territorial aggrandizement which recoils from no scheme of deception or robbery to accomplish its ends. It is more than probable that most of those who at present assail the administration for its attitude concerning the Hawaiian business are impelled by the first of these motives. They wish to break down the President, whose position in the confidence of the people is a tower of strength to his party, by discrediting his patrotism and his wisdom as a citizen and statesman; and to this end they resort to a trick which is as dishonest as it is transparent.

They know perfectly well that every word of President Cleveland's message as to the manner in which the Hawaiian government was overthrown a year ago is absolutely true; that the American minister at Honolulu, Mr. Stevens, had for a long time yearned and hoped for a revolution in Hawaii to bring on annexation; that he had communicated his hope to the State Department, and asked for permission to use the armed forces of the United States present in Hawaiian waters for something beyond the mere protection of the American legation and of the lives and property of American citizens; that less than two months before the blow was struck he had informed the State Department that "the golden hour was near at hand"; that when the hour was at hand he caused United States troops to be landed without there being any call for the protection of American property, and against the protest of the lawful authorities of Hawaii: that, as shown by Admiral Skerrett, the position in which the troops were placed was well calculated for the support of the revolutionary movement, but not at all for the protection of American property; that this was a warlike invasion of a friendly state; that the American minister recognized the self-proclaimed "provisional government" as the de facto government of Hawaii before it was in possession of the public property, and therefore before it was a government de facto; that the Queen yielded under protest to the superior force of the United States, and solemnly referred her case to the justice of our government; that the annexationists in hot haste offered Hawaii to the United States without the slightest authority from the Hawaiian people, whom they never dared to consult, but only on the strength of a coup de main, which had succeeded only through the aid afforded to it by the American minister and by United States troops.

All these facts the opponents of the President know. They know that a great wrong has been committed, and that the honor of the country has been tarnished. What do they do? In order to cover up the wrong done by men of their own party, they fiercely assail the man who seeks to right it for overstepping his powers. They seek to divert attention from the thief by abusing the policeman who is after the criminal. This is the meaning of Mr. Hoar's boisterous denunciations of the President in the Senate, and of Mr. Hitt's resolutions and Mr. Boutelle's wild outcries in the House of Representatives. According to them, no more dangerous blow has ever been struck at the free institutions of this country, and no greater outrage has ever been perpetrated against the casuse of progress and republican government in the world, than by President Cleveland's efforts to expose the misconduct of a faithless public servant, and to prevent the acqaisition of a foreign country by theft against the will of its people. It is hard to understand how men of any pretence to candor and decency can descend to a game so shamelessly hypocritical, which evidently now has become the plan of campaign of the Republicans in Congress, as well as in the larger number of their paty organs, against the Democratic administration. It cannot be said that so far the Democrats, at least in Congress, have put forth any remarkable effort to repel this perfidious attack. They have seemed rather inclined to let the good cause take care of itself. But it is to be hoped that they will not lose so excellent an opportunity for placing before the people, in the most drastic and instructive way, the pectacle of dishonest political tactics ecoiling upon their authors, and covering them with the disgrace and odium they deserve, This will be a great service to public morality.

There is one feature of the public discussion of the Hawaiian business especially painful and deplorable. It is the interest taken by so many clergymen on the side of the Hawaiian annexationists. Whether this is really owing to the fact, as has been suggested, that some of the most prominent leaders in the so-called Hawaiian revolution are sons of missionaries, and that this has stirred up the esprit de corps among the clergy, we shall not attempt to determine. Assuming their impulses to be entirely honest, we can hardly conceive of a more grievous aberration of judgment. We have before us a letter from a clergyman in which the writer gravely asserts that Secretary Gresham, in his first report to the President upon this subject, had "espoused the cause of barbarism against civilization." The reverned gentleman evidently forgets that whatever we may think as to the means by which civilization may be promoted in Hawaii, the civilization in which we as Americans are interested in the first line is American civilization. It is our chief duty to see to it that this American republic, which we are fond of calling the greatest and freest nation in the world, and the leader of human progress, should cultivate in itself and exhibit to the rest of mankind those evidences of justice, fair dealing, truthfulness, and general morality which are the essential attributes of genuine civilization.

The Queen of Hawaii may, for aught we know, be a very objectionable person, and her habits of life and methods of government may have left ever so much to desire. Yet she was the head of a state which, however small and feeble. was generally recognized as an independent member of the family of nations, with whom this republic maintained the same regular diplomatic intercourse through accredited ministers, and the same relations of friendly commerce, which we maintain with other nations. There are other sovereigns of whose personal characters we have a poor opinion, and whose methods of government fall far below our standards. But no truly civilized man will pretend that this gives us a right to permit our legations to become the headquarters of conspiracies against them, and our armed forces to be used in time of peace for aiding in the overthrow of their governments, that their territory may be turned over to us. True civilization holds a tramp to be as much entitled to common justice and good faith as a bishop. When our reverend friend soberly thinks of it, and summons the teachings of Christianity to enlighten his conscience, it will dawn upon him that, whatever relics of barbarism may still exist in little Hawaii, no more vicious blow could be struck at the cause of human civilization than by turning this American republic, the great champion of freedom and progress, into a nation of freebooters, and by sanctioning the receiving of stolen goods as a legitimate means of national aggrandizement. He may also begin to feel that it is an especially shameful thing, and one very dangerous to the authority of the church, when ministers of religion go out of their way to justify, and advocate as righteous, acts done by the agents of the government which, if done in private life, would lead the perpetrators straight to the penitentiary and to imperishable disgrace. No church can well afford to allow such teachings to be addressed by its ministers to the youth of the country.—Harper's Weekly.

—About a year ago I took a violent attack of la grippe. I coughed day and night for about six weeks, my wife then suggested that I try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. At first I could see no difference, but still kept taking it, and soon found that it was what I needed. If I got no relief from one dose I took another, and it was only a few days until I was free from the cough. I think people in general ought to know the value of this remedy, and I take pleasure in acknowledging the benefit I have received from it. It is characteristic of the Wren that it will sneak in and occupy the nest made by another bird, in preference to building one of its own. This same trait is often seen in business. It is shown by the imitators of

COTTOLENE

No sooner has the wonderful merit of this new vegetable shortening, so much better than lard, created for it remarkable sale and popularity than the business wrens are ready to move upon the market with many worthless counterfeits.
