Probabilities.

When the battle of the 5th of May was fought, GRANT estimated LEE's strength to be 100,000. His own army, including BURNSIDE's corps, and not counting the cavalry under SHERIDAN, has been variously estimated at from 125,000 to 150,000. We believe the former number nearer the truth. The estimated losses by LEE are—in killed and wounded, 25,000; prisoners in our hands, 12,000: total, 37,000—leaving LEE's present effective force, 63,000 men. GRANT's estimated losses are—in killed and wounded, 30,000; prisoners in Rebel hands, 3,000; total, 33,000—leaving Gen. GRANT's fighting force after the battle of Thursday last, 92,000 men. Difference in GRANT's favor on Friday last—29,000. But on our side, on Saturday GRANT was reinforced by a sufficient number of troops to make his army equal in strength to what it was when it crossed the Rapidan, or, say 125,000. If the foregoing estimates approximate to correctness—and we believe they do—is it not a very probable result that LEE will either run away or be compelled to surrender? Can he have any hope of successfully resisting twice his own strength?

If LEE should retreat, is it probable that he would go to Richmond? To take refuge there would seem to involve certain capitulation in the end, as a close investment, which GRANT would certainly make, would cut him off from all his supply communications and also prevent succor from reaching him from other Rebel armies. Is it not more probable that LEE's army and the whole Rebel government would abandon Richmond and Virginia and retreat to the Gulf States, as Rebel newspapers have hinted would be done in the last extremity?

Finally, if LEE should attempt to retreat into the Carolinas, is it probable, judging from what we know of Gen. GRANT's way of making war, that he would be permitted to take the whole, or even the half of his army with him?

The Question of Endurance.

WELLINGTON, at Waterloo, referring to the struggle then progressing, remarked, "We will see who can pound the longest." English endurance, aided by BLUCHER, won the day against the impetuosity of the French charges and the sublime devotion of the Old Guard.

The battles of the Wilderness and the Po recall the Iron Duke's celebrated saying. Hard pounding drove LEE out of the Wilderness, and drove him from his defenses on the Po. True, GRANT's numbers were superior to those of the rebel chieftain, but the disproportion in numbers, both in the Wilderness and on the Po, was fully equalized by the superiority of the natural position held by the Rebels, by the defenses they had erected, and by their greater familiarity with the battle-ground. The dogged endurance of the Federal troops—their determination to go to Richmond or go down in the attempt—alone gave us the victory. Friday, the 6th, and Thursday, the 12th of May, settled forever the question of the relative endurance of Northern and Southern troops. The former can "pound the longest."

And the side that can "pound the longest" wins the battle in the present campaign. Fortifications may aid LEE in prolonging the contest, but they cannot influence the result. The heaviest pounding is over, and the odds are against him.

Emancipation in Maryland.

The Maryland Constitutional Convention on Thursday of last week received the report presented by the majority of the Committee on the Declaration of Rights. It contained these provisions:

"Article 4. The Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof being the supreme law of the land, every citizen of this state owes paramount allegiance to the Constitution and government of the United States, and is not bound by any law or ordinance of this state in contravention or subversion thereof.

"Article 23. That hereafter in this state there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted; and all persons held to service or labor as slaves are hereby declared free."

There is nothing said about compensation, or gradual emancipation. The work proposed is to be thorough, uncompensated, and immediate. The report will be adopted by a large majority vote of the Convention.

Of course, the Copperhead papers have commenced the work of magnifying the losses of the present Virginia campaign—the Union losses, not the Rebel losses; they never do the latter. The Post of this city, for instance, mildly intimates that "the present campaign has been attended with a loss of perhaps 60,000 men." If the author of the statement were not a Copperhead, he would certainly be entitled to be considered a very fair specimen of the American Adder.

P. S.—Perhaps the Post man could find room for a long editorial with the above item for a text.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY SANITARY FAIR will probably be opened on the day designated—viz: to-day. The amplest arrangements have been made to facilitate the display of contributions from all parts of the country. The main building alone covers an area several thousand feet larger than the Metropolitan Fair, and there are outside buildings in use which adds nearly two thirds as much space as the main buildings. The cash subscriptions to begin with amount to $200,000, and it will be a tight race between New York and St. Louis for the palm on net receipts.

MAJOR D. L. EATON.—The numerous friends of this gentleman will regret to learn that he has been seriously ill for the past two or three weeks, and has been confined to his quarters during the time. He is again absent, however, and, with that zeal in the good cause for which he is so well noted, his first act is to visit the hospitals. See a letter from him in our local department to-day—first page.

THE Chicago Tribune has reached the enormous daily issue of 44,500 sheets, and the publishers say that if it were possible to print more their orders would be larger by several thousand. This newspaper success in a city that was a village thirty years ago is most wonderful.

"Y."—You write like a gentleman, and we answer you in the same spirit. When we spoke of GRANT's first dispatch to the War Department, we meant the first which the War Department had given to the public. Sorry you "couldn't see it."

INDICATIONS are not wanting that Pennsylvania will be called upon for her share of one hundred day volunteers to assist in putting an end to the rebellion.

Winfield Scott Hancock.

Every reader of this paper, we feel sure, will read with pride the following tribute to Gen. Hancock. It is from the North American.

The splendid achievements of General Hancock's corps in the present campaign in Virginia are again attracting attention to one of the finest soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. Since McClellan's brief telegraphic dispatch respecting the battle of Williamsburg spoke of Hancock's deeds on that day as superb, his name has been a familiar one in his native State, Pennsylvania, rendered so by his soldierly qualities in the field and his heroism wherever he has served. It is not necessary to reiterate the long catalogue of his gallant exploits. They are now well-known in this commonwealth, and they must ever continue to be.

To the people of Philadelphia Hancock had peculiarly endeared himself by his noble bearing, frank and generous manners, and his uniform courtesy. His reviewed the local militia and volunteers here on Washington's birthday, and as he rode along the line on Broad street, with his brilliant staff, the citizens who were thus enabled to form some idea of his appearance on the battle-field, hailed him with enthusiastic acclaim. He seemed, indeed, the beau ideal of a soldier on that occasion.

Since the opening of Grant's campaign in Virginia, however, Hancock has been in his true element. Largely backed by men of his own State, enlisted to serve under him especially, all whose confidence in him was unbounded, he has rivaled in his dashing charges and constant and fearless exposure the most famous leaders of Napoleon. Always brilliant and successful, he has, in the present campaign, made two desperate charges, which must long be remembered in our military history. The first was in the battle of the Wilderness, where he drove the enemy before him for a distance of two miles and held his position for hours, vainly waiting for the supporting columns which would secure his advance.

But his last and grandest exploit was reserved for the terrible battle of the Po where he made a charge which crushed one wing of the rebel army, carried their rifle pits, and captured between thirty and forty cannon and one and a half divisions of Hill's corps. He took the division of General E. W. Johnson entire, with all its officers, including a Maj General and two Brigadiers. This was the division formerly commanded by Stonewall Jackson. A year ago Jackson himself was killed at Chancellorsville, and now his division is annihilated. These rebel troops once so much dreaded for their fierce and sanguinary charges, have now met their match in a General surpassing their old leader in impetuosity and daring, and commanding a corps which seems endued with his own enthusiastic spirit. All honor to the heroic Hancock and his noble corps. As Pennsylvanians, it is impossible to avoid feeling a just pride in their valor and achievements, however much we may deplore the cost to many a family at home.

Honors to the Hero—Description of the Gold Medal now being Prepared for Lt.-General Grant.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

The work of engraving the gold medal for General Grant, in accordance with an act of Congress passed in December last, is in the hands of Mr. A. C. Paquet, engraver at the United States Mint, this great artist having been chosen by Mr. Autropus, the designer. The medal is to be made of pure gold; to weigh thirty ounces. It is four inches in diameter. The following is a brief description of the design: On the center of the front of the medal is a correct photographic profile of the General, partly encircled with this inscription on the top: "MAJOR-GENERAL ULYSSIS GRANT." On the lower part are the following words: "Joint resolution of Congress, December 17, 1863." The embellishments are as follows: Near the outer edge is a circle containing two American flags, the staffs crossing each other. The folds of the great national emblem are entwined around tobacco, cotton, sugar, and rice, the four staple productions of the states wherein General Grant has planted the flag of our country. On the top is a wreath of oak and laurel neatly entwined. On the rim outside of these embellishments, are thirteen States, representing the original States. On the other side of the medal the design is beautiful and appropriate. It represents the Goddess of Liberty seated on a sphere, her right hand resting gracefully on the national shield, with the word "Donelson" thereon. To the right of this is an eagle in the act of taking an upward flight, with the American flag pending in festoons from its beak. The sacred emblem being thus raised discloses a view of the city of Vicksburg on one side, and Lookout Mountain and Chattanooga valley on the other, with scene in front. The river Mississippi, bearing on its bosom iron clads, transports, and steamboats, is also well represented in the picture. On the lower centre of the medal is a pyramid of war triumphs, dividing the views of Vicksburg and Lookout Mountain. The base of this part of the design is a field piece, near which may be seen a couple of soldiers. The outer rim of this side of the medal also contains thirteen stars, being the number in the galaxy of the original Confederation. There is no other good medal of this size in this country, excepting the Ingraham medal. The engraver expects to have the work completed in seven months, for which he will receive the sum of $2,200. We may say that, in response to the resolution of Congress, a number of beautiful designs were submitted; that of Mr. Autrobus being the most appropriate and beautiful, was selected. There will be a number of bronze medals made from the die after the gold one shall have been completed.

The Difference.

The World gives as the official return of the losses during McClellan's "Seven Days" on the Peninsula, 15,249 killed, wounded and missing, and then adds:

"The Tribune correspondent says that in the first six days of the series of battles Gen. Grant has been fighting he lost 40,000 men, nearly all of whom are killed and wounded, but few prisoners being taken. Yet the Seven Days' battles, which were called disastrous, left McClellan within half the distance of Richmond as compared with Grant's position at last accounts. This fact would seem to prove that the Peninsula route must have some advantages as compared with the overland route, President Lincoln's 'plan' to the contrary."

This would certainly be a very telling statement both against Gen. Grant and Mr. Lincoln, were it not for the circumstance that when McClellan lost his 15,000 men he was getting away from Richmond as fast as he could, leaving that city and the rebel army safe, sound and triumphant; while Grant is pushing his way toward Richmond and is grinding the rebel army to powder. Moreover, there was probably not one of the seven days on which McClellan would not have given a considerable sum to be with his whole force north of Spottsylvania Court House. Instead of being glad that he was so near Richmond, he wished himself far enough away.

Sir John Moore, in the Peninsular War, did not lose one-fifth as many men as Wellington, but Moore lost them in trying to escape to his ships, Wellington in driving the French out of Spain. According to the McClellan school of warriors, however, Moore was the greatest general of the two. Why will not some one save Little Mac from his admirers?

SPOTTSYLVANIA, the scene of the recent terrific battles, and which is now in our possession, is a small village, fifty-five miles from Richmond, off the railroad, but connected with the rebel capital by good roads. The river Po runs south of the village. The North Anna river, to which Lee is reported to have retreated, is about twelve miles south.

GARIBALDI.—The London Examiner has a severe article upon the treatment of Garibaldi by Gladstone, which it concludes as follows:

"Garibaldi is torn from us. Our feelings overpower us, and forbid us to express our inexpressible sorrow and indignation at this foul wrong to the holiest sympathies and aspirations of the nation."
