and feather the Rebels."] I am very little inclined on any occasion to say anything unless I hope to produce some good by it. [A voice—"You do that, go on."] The only thing I think of just now not likely to be better said by some one else is a matter in which we have heard some other person blamed for what I did myself. [Voice—"What is it?"]

There is a very wide-spread attempt to have a quarrel between General McClellan and the Secretary of War. Now, I occupy a position which enables me to believe, at least, that these two gentlemen are not nearly so deep in the quarrel as some presuming to be their friends. [Cries of "Good."] General McClellan's attitude is such that, in the very selfishness of his nature, he cannot but wish to be successful, and I hope he will—and the Secretary of War is precisely in the same situation.

If the military commanders in the field cannot be successful, not only the Secretary of War, but myself, for the time being master of them both, cannot but be failures.—[Laughter and applause.] I know that General McClellan wishes to be successful, and I know that he does not wish it any more than the Secretary of War does for him, and both of them together no more than I wish it. [Applause, and cries of "good!"]

Sometimes we hear a dispute as to how many men General McClellan has had, and those who would disparage him say he has had a very large number, and those who would disparage the Secretary of War insist that General McClellan has had a very small number. The basis for this is there is always a very wide difference, and on this occasion, perhaps a wider one between the grand total on McClellan's rolls and the men actually fit for duty, and those who disparage him talk of grand totals on paper; and those who would disparage the Secretary of War talk of those at present fit for duty.

General McClellan has sometimes asked for things that the Secretary of War did not give him. McClellan is not to blame for asking for what he wanted and needed, and the Secretary of War is not to blame for not giving when he had none to give. [Applause, laughter, and cries of "good."] And I say here, so far as I know, the Secretary of War has withheld no one thing at any time within my power to give him. [Wild applause, and a voice, "Give him enough now."]

The President continued—I have no accusation against General McClellan. I believe he is a brave and able man—[applause]—and I stand here as justice requires me to do—to take upon myself what has been charged upon the Secretary of War as withholding from him. I have talked longer than I expected to do—[cries of "No, no! go on!"]—and now I avail myself of my privilege of saying no more.

Critical Notices of the Press.

We would not so often call attention to Harper's Weekly if we were not well satisfied that it is the family paper published in the United States, and for that reason, and that alone, we desire to see it undermine and root out a certain kind of literature too prevalent, which blunts the morals of its readers, vitiates their taste for sensible reading, and is altogether bad in its effects.—New London Advertiser.

Its fresh leaves, its clear type, its entertaining variety, its severe but just criticisms upon the follies of the time, its elegantly written and instructive articles, and its able correspondence, all combine to make it the model newspaper of our country, and one that every family must prize. Its condensed weekly summary of Foreign and Domestic Intelligence is altogether superior to that contained in any other journal. Being published too, in a form for preservation and binding, if taken care of as it deserves to be, it will be found in future years as welcome a companion for the family and fireside as the day on which it was first perused.—*N.
