Wise and Otherwise.

Furious Felines.

On a pine wood shed, in alley dark, where scattered moonbeams, sitting through a row of tottering chimneys and awning torn and drooping, fell, strode back, and forth, with stiff and tense drawn muscle and peculiar tread, a cat.

His name was Norval; on yonder neighboring shed his father fought the cats that came in squads from streets beyond Dupont, in search of food and strange adventure.

Grim war he courted; and his twisted tail, and spine upheaving in fantastic curve; and claws distended and ears flatly pressed against a head thrown back defiantly, told of impending strife.

With eyes a gleam, and schreeching blasts of war, and steps as silent as the falling dew, young Norval crept along the splintered edge, and gazed a moment through the darkness down, with tail awag triumphantly.

Then with an imprecation and a growl—perhaps an oath in direct vengeance hissed—he started back, and crooked body like the letter S, or rather U inverted stood in fierce expectancy.

'Twas well. With eyeballs glaring and ears all aslant, and open mouth in which two rows of fangs stood forth in sharp and dread conformity, slow up a post from out the dark below a head appeared.

A dreadful tocsin of determined strife young Norval, uttered; then, with face unblanched, and moustache standing straight before his nose, and tail flung wildly to the passing breeze, stepped back in cautious invitations to the foe.

Approaching the other, and with preparations dire, each cat surveyed the vantage of the field. Around they walked, with tails uplifted and backs high in air, while from their mouths, in accents hissing with consuming rage, dropped brief but awful sentences of hate.

Thrice around the roof they went in circle, each with eye upon the foe intently bent; then sidewise moving, as is wont with cats gave one loudgrawn terrific, savage caterwaul, and buckled in.

The fur flew. A mist of hair hung o'er the battle-field. High above the din of passing wagons rose the dreadful tumult of struggling cats. So gleamed their eyes in frenzy, that to me, who saw the conflict from a window near, naught else was plain but fiery stars that moved in orbits most eccentric.

An hour the struggled in tempestuous might, then faint and fainter grew the squall, of war, until all sound was hushed. Then went forth with lanthorn, and the fields surveyed. What saw I?

Six claws—one ear—of teeth, perhaps a handful, and save fur, naught else except a solitary tail. That tail was Norval's—by a ring I knew't. The air was, but we'll let the matter pass. That tale will do without the ear.

HERE is a case for lawyers, which occurs in the town of Genesee, New York. It seems that Dr. Cutler's barn stands on the line separating his land from that of a neighbor. The neighbor has a number of cows in the adjoining lots and the cows have been in the habit of reaching their tongues through the boards of the barn into the manager of the doctor's horse and stealing hay. The other day the tongue of one of these cows was bitten off by the horse, and the question now is, whether the owner of the cow can obtain damages. The animal was on his premises when she lost her tongue; but then, certainly, the tongue was trespassing upon the doctor's side of the line.

For the Farmer.

How Good Farmers Save Money.

They take good papers and read them.

They keep account of farm operations.

They do not leave their implements scattered over the farm exposed to snow, rain and heat.

They repair their tools and buildings at a proper time and money. They use their money judiciously, and they do not attend auction sales to purchase all kinds of trumpery because its cheap.

They see that their fences are well repaired, and their cattle are not grazing in the meadows or grain fields or orchards.

They do not refuse to make correct experiments in a small way, of many new things.

They plant their fruit trees well, care for them, and of course get good crops.

They practice economy by giving their stock good shelter during the winter; also good food, taking all that is unsound, half rotten or moldy out.

They do not keep tribes of cats, or snarling dogs around their premises who eat more in a month than they are worth in a whole life-time.

Lastly, they read the advertisements, know what is going on, and frequently save money by it.

Succe sful farming is made by attention to little things. The farmer who does his best, earns his money with best appreciation and uses it with the best results. Such men are the salt of the earth.
