The Late Dreadful Fire at St. Louis

SHOULD be a warning to all to leave no means unemployed by which such terrible disasters can be averted.

HALE'S ROTARY PUMP AND FIRE ENGINE can be so constructed as to throw a flood of water, by the aid only of two to four men. At a small cost, every person can have upon his premises a machine which will throw, with his power, mentioned above, a five-inch stream, from 80 to 120 feet horizontally, or 70 feet in height.

Had one of these machines been upon each steamer and each building burned at the late fire in St. Louis, or even upon the boat where the fire originated, who can doubt that millions of property might have been saved.

One of the above Machines can be seen at the corner of Smithfield and Fifth streets." Fire Hall
