SCIENTIFIC NOTES.

—In some interesting experiments Dr Leibenberg has shown that the presence of lime in the soil is absolutely necessary for the germination of many plants, while many others do not seem to require it at all.

—A large fortune of several million francs was left by M. Henry Gifford, the eminent engineer, who recently died at his home in Paris to the French Government for use in promoting the progress of scientific discovery.

—An English gentleman has exhibited a hyacinth which, in consequence of being under a stone, had blossomed six inches below the surface of the ground. The leaves were white, but the flowers were a deep purple.

—The French physiologists Perrier and Poirier have found that, properly speaking, star-fishes have no blood circulation at all, as what has hitherto been supposed to be the heart in these animals is simply a gland.

—It has been noticed that wines, especially when hard and acid, are improved in flavor by the passage of an electric current through them. The electricity is claimed to have the same effect as age, mellowing the wines by the decomposition of the bitartrate of potash.

—The electric light was used in a recent search for three persons who had lost their way in an attempt to ascend a peak of the Alps. The use of the light was not successful, but the idea seems to have been a good one, and in many similar cases might serve to direct the wanderers.

—The tensile strength of glass has been shown to be between 2,000 and 9,000 pounds per square inch, and the crushing strength between 6,000 and 10,000 pounds per square inch. By trials a short time ago, M. Traulionie found that flooring glass, one inch square and one foot between the end supports, breaks under a load of 170 pounds.

—The Central Bureau of the weather service of France receives daily ninety-seven telegrams from foreign parts, and fifty-two from France. From these telegraphic reports the weather probabilities are calculated for eight agricultural and four maritime districts, to which warnings are telegraphed. Eighty-two per cent. of the predictions thus sent out have been justified.

—Dr. Suys is credited with the statement that Brown-Sequard once injected the head of a dog, after being seperated from the body, with defibrinated and oxygenated blood, and at the moment when the injection of this blood had recalled manifestations of life he spoke the dog's name. The eyes of the head thus cut from the trunk turned toward him, as if the master's voice had still been heard and recognized.

—Two microscopes—called the "Jumbo" and the "Midget"—formed an interesting exhibit at a recent meeting of a London society. The former instrument, probably made about half a century ago, was four feet and a half high and weighed 125 pounds; while the "Midget," fully equipped for work, had a total height of only four inches, and weighed but a few ounces. Six of such microscopes as the smaller one could be enclosed in the eye-piece of the larger —The question of the existence of earth-tides, or oscillations of the earth's crust corresponding to those produced in the sea by the attraction of the moon, is being investigated by a British commission. A pendulum is so suspended that its slightest motion turns a mirror and causes the point of light reflected by it upon a distant screen to move very perceptibly. The pendulum is proved to be in continual change of position, for the motion of the reflected light is incessant, and so irregular that it is hardly possible to determine its mean position on the screen within 5 or 6 inches.

—Camels live from 40 to 50 years; horses average from 25 to 30; oxen about 20; sheep, 8 or 9; and dogs, 12 to 14. Concerning the ages attained by non-domesticated animals only a few isolated facts are known. The East Indians believe that the life period of elephants is about 300 years, instances being recorded of these animals having lived 130 years in confinement after capture at an unknown age. Whales are estimated to reach the age of 400 years. Some reptiles are very long-lived, an instance being furnished by a tortoise which was confined in 1633 and existed until 1753, when it perished by an accident. Birds sometimes reach a great age, the eagle and the swan having been known to live 100 years. The longevity of fishes is often remarkable. The carp has been known to live 200 years; common river trout, 50 years; and the pike, 90 years, while Gesner, a Swiss naturalist, relates that a pike caught in 1497 bore a ring recording the capture of the same fish 267 years before. Insects are very short-lived, usually completing the term of their existence in a few weeks or months, some even perish within a few hours after emerging from a grub state, and die on the very day of entering upon their new life. As a general rule, not to applied too closely, large types of animals live longer than smaller.

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you do without a thought of fame.—[Longfellow.

If a man empties his purse into his head no man can take it away from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest.—[Franklin.

There are moments of despondence, when Shakespeare thought himself no poet, and Raphael no painter, when the greatest wits have doubted the excellence of their happiest efforts.

Living men must have living institutions. It is very idle to suppose that we are to be ruled by men who are lying in their graves. Each age is capable of judging of its needs; it is not to be supposed that a past age knew what we should want.

—He that is warned by all the folly of others has perhaps attained the soundest wisdom.

—The worldly say—It was Longfellow who slyly described the lady as wearing flowers "on the congregation side of her bonnet."

—Seized the occasion—"So you would not take me to be twenty?" said a young lady to her partner while dancing a polka one evening. "What would you take me for, then?" "For better, for worse," replied he, and he was accepted.
