THE CONTINENTAL HOTEL adds another to the beautiful adornments of our attractive city. It is already conceded, by all parties, that no city in the Union possesses the many and valuable attractions to strangers that ours does. In this point of view we feel proud of the acquisition of this new and noble structure, and rank it its attractiveness with the gorgeously furnished Clothing Bazaar of Granville Stokes, the fashionable clothier and tailor, No. 607 Chestnut street. The incoming year ok will, no doubt, bring with it many strangers, who should avail themselves of the opportunity of seeing these two palatial establishments.

INGRATITUDE.—There is an aged lady who takes her sewing, goes into the Maine House of Representatives, seats herself in the area in front of the Speaker, and indulges in occasional responses to the speeches of the members, according to her caprice. The other day the Speaker remarked incidentally that he thought the most elegant garments in the Union were those made at the Brown Stone Clothing Hall of Rockhill & Wilson, Nos. 603 and 605 Chestnut street, above Sixth, Philadelphia. The old lady immediately cried "hear!" "hear!" and shook her head approvingly.

THE QUEEN OF RUSSIA'S ICE PALACE.

No forest fell
When thou wast built; no quarry sent its stores
To enrich thy walls; but thou didst hew the floods,
And make thy marble of the glassy wave.
In such a palace Poetry might place
The scenery of Winter.

So sang the sweet and plaintive poet, Cowper; but we cannot help thinking, after all, that the better material for a palace is brown stone, like the "Keystone Palace" Clothing Store, located under the "Continental," and the scenery of Winter should be the warm and elegant-fitting clothing sold there. There is but one price, and that marked plainly on all the garments. Charles Stokes, proprietor of the "Keystone Palace" Clothing Store, 824 Chestnut street.
