April and showers, warm days and mud, with everything reeking, steaming, sweating. And now the annual repainting, papering, white-washing, painting that goes by the name of house-cleaning is just in season.

We have never been able to see just how to avoid the thing; perhaps it is one of the evils we must submit to that we may escape greater ones. Still it always seemed to us that Mrs. Stowe's description of Aunt Dinah's spells of putting things to rights was a covert satire on the annual house-cleanings of Yankee land. We doubt, though, if she could tell a better way. We have heard it said the term is an Americanism. Who knows whether this is so? Can some English housekeeper tell us if the practice prevails over there? Has it been handed down as one of the institutions which a thousand years have made unchangable, or is it one of the make-shifts of American origin?

At all events we would like to find a place that would always be neat, fresh and clean without the nuisance of house-cleaning.

An exchange says:

The marble epidemic has broken out and broken-hearted mothers will do well to sew buckskins on the knees of their young hopefuls' breeches, for they will play and for "keeps" too.

By all means let them play.

James S. Davis, brother-in-law of O. J. and E. O. Rees, has purchased the billiard rooms lately established by David Ingraham and will put in another table and fit them up in first-class style. He intends devoting them exclusively to the legitimate purposes of the game and to make them unexceptionable as a place of amusement.

Mr. Davis has formerly been an engineer on the Lake Shore and Southern Michigan Railroad, but last September took with an accident by which he lost one of his legs. We hope to see him succeed in his present business.

Domestic Scandal.—There is one foible among housekeepers that cannot be too severely reprobated. It is a contemptible fidling for a knowledge of their neighbors' affairs. This curiosity leads some to encourage and listen to the scandalous prattle of their own servants concerning the domestic affairs of other families in which they have been employed.

Servants are always ready to take advantage of the slightest advance towards familiarity on the part of the mistress; and when they find one weak enough to relish a relation of the vices and follies of others, the appetite will always be administered to so long as a prolific brain can coin a falsehood. Mistresses should reflect, while encouraging this practice, that their own household will be served up, with no less exaggeration or defect, whenever their domestics shall pass into another family. And where is the remedy for this evil? It lies in the hands of every head of a family. This tattling tendency should be stopped at every commencement; and if a refusal to listen to the scandalous catalogue of private weakness or error were accompanied by a severe reprimand, society would be more benefitted.

We take the above sensible article from the Conneaut Press. Our attention was attracted to it from the fact that there was fresh in our mind a story we had heard of the domestic affairs of a private family that a servant had told among strangers. We don't know as the average of human nature is strong enough to withstand the temptation thus presented, but the practice of encouraging such gossip is one of the most contemptible to which human weakness condescends.

We had placed in our hands the other day the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Constitutional Convention, of which Wm. H. Armstrong is chairman. We have had a high opinion of this gentleman's ability and good sense, but this report certainly has not added to it. It re-models the whole judicial system of the state; degrades the courts of common pleas to a secondary position; places the principal jurisdiction now exercised by them in a cumbersome and dilatory circuit court, substantially far removed from the great mass of the people; and altogether introduces a new and strange system.

By the way, we suggest that there be added to the Sunday service in all our churches the special petition, God save us from the Constitutional Convention.

We hear reports from various parts of the very bad condition of the roads. The ground seems to have been frozen to a great depth and as the frost leaves it there is apparently no bottom to be found. One man said to us within a day or two, "it is the worst going between here and my place I ever saw." On Tuesday night the Wellsville stage came near going in out of sight near E. H. Bishop's, in Hebron, though we believe they got through safely at last. But if this weather continues the ground will soon settle again.

Now is the time for farmers and all others having charge of stock of any kind to give it special attention. Many valuable animals are lost every year by neglect at this season. Animals as well as human beings feel the effect of the change from the long severe cold to warm weather and need the best of care.

Last Saturday we had the first of a series of thunder storms that lasted for several days, accompanied by warm weather and south and westerly winds. The result has been a rapid melting of the snow and an equally rapid rise of the streams. Communication with the outside world has been very nearly suspended, but the water is now falling and we look for travel to resume its usual course in a short time. We have heard reports of serious damage to the railroad but cannot at present tell to what extent they may be true. Below here the water overflowed the flats heavily but in this immediate locality though the river rose higher than it has before for years, no damage has been done.

The fact is, with the stream clear of ice and other obstructions, when it rises so as to overflow its banks here in Coudersport, it will be time to watch for the reappearance of the bow in the Heavens.

Pigeons have been seen flying over this region in quite large numbers of late, but none, as far as we have heard, have seen fit to make a light. They were evidently hunting a feeding ground.

Isn't it about time to cover the "nakedness" of the woodshed frame on the Court House Square?

Brown & Kelley have been laying a tile drain from the basement of their hotel to the river at the foot of East street. It was a good deal like digging a canal but will be a great improvement to the house.

We have had one or two days that were quite favorable to warming in the sun and they seemed to be made useful.

We publish a notice this week of the death of Winfield G. Taggart. There is something more than ordinarily sad about his fate. He was a very bright, intelligent boy, an only son and the pet and pride of father and sisters. Just growing out of boyhood into manhood, everything gave promise of a useful, happy life. But consumption developed itself and his life suddenly closed.

He had a severe illness a year ago last fall, and through the winter following was very feeble, but last summer he rallied, and his friends entertained some hopes of his final recovery, but when cold weather came on again he began to decline and rapidly sunk away.

We are informed by one who was with him frequently during the last weeks of his life that he was satisfied with the way things were ordered with him, and that the mystery of death caused him no fears He was fully prepared for the change.

We take the following from the Wellsville Free Press of April 2d:

In our last paper we published the obituary of Mrs. Mary Lyman Jones, wife of Wm. R. Jones, merchant, of Coudersport. It shows the esteem in which she was held, that thirty persons of the first position in Coudersport were present at the funeral in Oswayo. The church was not able to accommodate all who attended. The Rev. J. Wainwright Ray, of Wellsville, read the full Episcopal service, in which many joined; and preached from the words in St. John, xix. 41. "Now there was in the garden a sepulchre." He closed with these words: "We have to day a painful illustration of our subject. There is a sepulchre, as it were, in the garden." It is a very young woman who is in this coffin. At the funeral of her aunt, on Dec. 18 last, I was favored with a conversation with the deceased and her husband, now so afflicted. One could not but notice her freshness and almost the flush and bloom of health and beauty. She was evidently intelligent beyond what most can claim and was a teacher, like her aunt Lucretia and uncle——, of real worth and usefulness. Married to the man of her choice, and who was well settled in business in Coudersport, her life may be said to have been a garden in which taste and beauty were happily blended. Only here and there is a young woman more pleasantly situated at home, and with her parents and relatives more near in place and affection. She was even now, of late, on a visit to the old home, and came on St. Valentine's day to have her reunion. This was the garden. But the sepulchre was even here, hidden by the snows, and into it we are about to deposit all that was mortal of this dear one.

Three months ago she saw the flowers and immortelles cast into the grave of Miss Lyman, and before the snows are gone, before those offerings have faded, we are to bear this precious dust to the same grounds. I am much affected that she wished me to officiate at her funeral. Thank God we bear her as one early baptized into the faith and salvation of Christ's church, in which faith she has also been educated, and in which she died. As a Christian it is that we can say over her grave the beautiful service of the church. It is not only 'earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust,' but also, 'I am the resurrection and the life,' saith the Lord. It is, also, 'I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, 'write from henceforth, blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'' The spring will soon come again, the flowers will appear on the earth, and will be in bloom over her grave. Mary will not be here to greet the birds and the roses. But there is a garden above—Paradise is there, and there she may be, even now, in such beauty and blissful delights as would make our gardens and our bliss poor in comparison. Our Saviour said, "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall never be taken away from her."
