The Clearfield Republican.

WEDNESDAY.....Oct. 17, 1866.

AN ENTERPRISE.—Messrs. Fleming & Hoel have determined to fill a vacuum in the business enterprise of Curwensville, in the form of a clothing store. We invite the attention of the public to their card elsewhere. They deserve the patronage of the public.

WASH CLEAN.—We direct the attention of the public to the "Snow Flake Powder" advertisement in another column. There is no use in living dirty when a whole family can be washed clean for three cents.

Representative--Official.

The Return Judges for this Representative District met in the Court House, in this place, on Tuesday, and presented the following returns:

County.	Hunt, D.	M'Kay, A.
Clearfield - - - -	2,788	1,648
Elk - - - - - -	926	353
Forest - - - - -	76	99

More Potatoes.

PENNVILLE, Oct. 4, 1866.

MR. EDITOR:—I have noticed lately by your paper, that some potato growers have been doing a little blowing. We can do a little of that in this section, and besides, we have got the potatoes, too. My neighbor, Thomas A. Hoover, on the 10th day of May last, planted four pounds of Goodrich potatoes, and on the 10th of September he dug them, and found that the yield was 103½ pounds. He also planted four pounds of Harrison, at the same time, and the yield was 106½ pounds. As I was passing by his corn field the other day, he called my attention to a pumpkin vine, which had two branches, one east and the other west, to which there were attached seven pumpkins, which weighed together 120 pounds. It will be recollected that this yield has not been produced in a well cultivated garden lot, but in a common field, near this village. Your town-lot farmers will have to try again. Yours.

GRAMPIAN HILLS.

The Life of a State.

Will any sincere believer in the propriety of the position assumed by Congress towards the Southern States, undertake to give himself, not us, a clear explanation of the present position of what is called West Virginia in the American Union? How came New York to be equally matched in the Senate of the United States by two Senators representing a new State within the boundaries of old Virginia? If secession and rebellion deprived Virginia of her locality in the Union, of her representation, or right of representation, in the councils of the nation, how could she give that consent which by the Constitution was necessary to the erection of a new State within her boundaries?

No better illustration could be needed than this of the inconsistency of the Radical politicians. Virginia was regarded as a State for all their purposes, but is regarded as no State when they have another purpose to carry out. She certainly is no more out of the Union now than she was in the time of war, when Southern armies held her northern frontier. If the policy of Congress is to be made the law of the land, does it not follow, as a matter of course, that the State of West Virginia vanishes out of existence? How can terms of readmission to the Union, extra-constitutional, be imposed on Virginia, without treating her as a unit from the hour of her pretended secession? How can she be kept out of the Union as "a rebel State," without keeping her all out? The only possible answer is revolutionary. Some of the more violent Radicals acknowledge that West Virginia exists only by the effect of revolutionary measures, both in that State and in Congress. One Senator distinctly declared that he voted for the admission of West Virginia, knowing it to be unconstitutional, because the Constitution was suspended by the war, and all things were in a revolutionary condition. But even that bold plea for Radical legislation was denied by the majority of the Radical leaders, and there is no pretense for it now. All is peace, and the Constitution is the only law on which Congress rests for any of its powers. Is Virginia dead because the war is ended? Has she ceased to be a State because the Southern Confederacy is a thing of the past?

In the haste with which men follow political leaders, they forget the injury done to great principles on which the Union rests. It is time to regard law and establish its supremacy over all the land. It is of vast importance to the North that the supremacy of the Constitution as it is should be once more assured, and that without delay. We drift along from one grand error to another, and are rapidly loosing sight of the only safe anchorage for the ship of state. Inconsistencies mark the whole course of the Radical politics. It is not law, but mad desire for success and power, which seems to guide the course of those who so foolishly accuse the President of "usurpation," while they advocate nothing but usurpation.

Nemesis—Joe Holt.

We had supposed that the rhinoceros hide of the notorious Judge Advocate Joe Holt was impervious, and proof against the indignation and contempt which his infamous career has excited among honorable men throughout the world; but it seems that the flood of deserved execration and maledictions of mankind was too much for even him. The conscience-stricken man is out in an appeal for mercy We copy the following from the Loyal Cincinnati Commercial:

We have received a slight pamphlet, entitled "Vindication of Judge Advocate General Holt from the foul slanders of confessed perjurers and suborners, acting in the interest of Jefferson Davis." The matter of the pamphlet is prefaced by this brief note, which shows how intensely Judge Holt has suffered from the slanders that he resents:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4, 1866.

"To all Loyal Men:—In the name of simple justice—which is all that I claim from friend or foe—your attention is respectfully invited to the subjoined article from the Washington Chronicle, of yesterday, as presenting a perfectly truthful vindication of myself from the atrocious calumny with which traitors, confessed perjurers and suborners are now so basely pursuing me.

J. HOLT."

The N. Y. Tribune condenses the pamphlet into these sentences:

"General Holt was duped by the arch villian who called himself Sanford Conover, as others had been before him. Deceived by Conover's lies, he gave that scoundrel credence and money which might have been better bestowed. Conover, thus supported, suborned other villains to commit perjuries confirmatory of his own—all of them received and accredited in perfect good faith by Judge Holt; but, when the House Committee proceeded to investigate them some of the second-hand rascals recanted and confessed their perjury; whereupon Conover, though he stoutly reiterated and stood by his original imposture, soon took occasion to vanish, and has since remained invisible. Of course his whole fabric of villainy falls to the ground. Such are the material facts in the case; and they nowise impeach the integrity of Judge Holt. He was simply the victim of an atrocious scoundrel."

"That is all there is about it," adds the Commercial, anxious to get rid of a subject so disgraceful to the "loyal." It is enough, heaven knows, but it is not all. If Mr. Joseph Holt had come out, immediately upon the discovery that Conover was a perjured knave, published the truth about him, and stated that he was deceived, there might have been some credit given to the excuse. But instead of doing this, Mr. Joseph Holt busied himself, long after the character of the Conover crowd was known, in screening them from justice, in hunting up other perjuries to support their statements, and in writing false and sophistical arguments to the Judiciary Committee of the House, to support their issue of perjuries, which statements decided the Abolition majority of that Committee in making that false and malicious report in reference to the case of Mr. Davis, which still stands a monument of wicked and libelous accusations. Mr. Holt combined with the Abolition members of that Committee to conceal the papers belonging to it, and to prevent Mr. Rodgers from making a just and truthful report in reference to Mr. Davis. Mr. Holt used this villain Conover, not only to poison the minds of the Northern people with his perjuries against Mr. Davis, but in various other persecutions and trials. The same gang were prominent in the trial of Mrs. Surratt and Wirz, and the testimony given by them served as an excuse for the execution of these victims of Holt. Like the hired perjurers of Titus Oates, these suborned witnesses were put forward by Holt upon every occasion that it was profitable to establish some scandalous lie about a Southern man or a Northern opponent. With their aid, Holt and Stanton took the lives of some and held the lives of of other citizens in their hands for more than a year. It was only after the villains became notorious, and the co-laborer and instrument of Holt had escaped, and when Blair denounced Holt as a villain guilty of subornation and perjury, and the charge had been echoed all over the land, that the Judge Advocate comes out, admits his guilt, and pleads that he was duped into it by other and greater villains than himself. "That's all there is about it," but in the name of all that is decent, is that not enough to secure to Holt the "simple justice" which he asks, by an incarceration in a penitentiary to which he sent better men by his plots and perjuries?

It is not surprising that Holt utters a howl of agony when he thinks of his deserts, when he calls to mind the hatred, execration and contempt in which he is held, and the festering infamy which will cling to his name as long as it is remembered. Were the hundreds whom he has ruined and impoverished by false imprisonment to dog his steps by day, and those whom he has murdered by the same instrumentalities of corruption, perjury and despotism, to haunt his dreams by night, as the victims of Titus Oates and Doughfield haunted those prototypes, it would be but a portion of the punishment Holt deserves—the apparation of the Nemesis he has invoked.—Ohio Crisis.
