PITTSBURGH:

SATURDAY MORNING, MARCH 2, 1861.

WHAT WILL THE PEOPLE SAY?

What will the people say? The self-supposed representatives of the people have been meeting in conventions and conferences; have been caucusing and committeeing; have been writing resolutions, proposing them, supporting them, amending them, and have ended by what they call carrying them: and all this with much expenditure of breath in the "irrepressible conflict" of debate. But after all that has been said and done in the late Conference in Washington, and in the Committee of Thirty-three, and even in Congress itself, still the question recurs—What will the people say?

Will not the people of the North ask before they vote on any proposition which may be submitted to them—Why it is they are called upon to vote an amendment to the Constitution, at the present time? Why, if the work of amendment is at all necessary, choose the process as if it were the right time to do it?

Will not the people of the North ask their representatives in Congress, and elsewhere, what kind of precedent this one of secession, in its two forms, is likely to prove? Here is secession as one—secession insisted on as an accomplished fact in the Gulf States,—and secession in posse—the same secession spirit threatening to embody itself immediately in like manner, and so become a fact, in several of the Border States—chosen to give a fit opportunity, and used as a fit instrument, to initiate certain desired changes in the Constitution.

Will not the people repudiate altogether such a mode of initiating changes of the Constitution? Will they not ask that the party or section that desires any changes to be made shall propose them otherwise? Will they not ask the professed friends of the Union in those Border States, instead of choosing so unworthy an opportunity and employing means so unfit, to rally, all of them, as at the trumpet-call of loyalty, honor and sacred duty, and with their compatriots of the North show one united, unbroken front of resistance to traitors and treason everywhere, under whatever mask disguised, and whatever name they may skulk under.

Will not the people of the North look to the friends of the Union in the Border States with a reasonable hope, in this hour when the eyes of the world are fixed upon us, that they will stand side by side, shoulder to shoulder, with them, on the ramparts of the Constitution, finding in the hour of threatened danger only an opportunity to renew their oath of fidelity and loyalty to their country, and an efficient means of proving that by no act of theirs shall the bond of fraternity be weakened or broken? Will they not reasonably ask all who profess to be friends of the Union to prove their fidelity by their acts as well as in words?

The people of the North have elected a President in a constitutional manner, who will be solemnly sworn on the fourth of March, at the inauguration, to maintain the Constitution in every part, and to administer the government faithfully in accordance therewith; law, then, can any one of men, loving the Union and the Constitution, talk of refusing to submit without guarantees, &c. &c. and an amendment of the Constitution, so as to deprive the people, as far as possible, of reaching the results they have sought and are constitutionally entitled to?

What will the people say, then, but that every statesman in the Border States must at once see the evil such a course involves?—must at once see what a mischievous precedent it will be found, written on the page of history?

May it be that they will, rising as they should to the greatness of the occasion, prove worthy to act for the States with which the immortal names of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Clay are associated in the past,—to act worthily, we say, for those States and for our common country; and instead of destroying the prestige which has been so slowly acquired, demonstrate now to the nations of the earth that we too have a nationality—a sacred covenant by which we are one, in spite of all superficial diversities, in spite of our sects in religion and our parties in politics—one in our national interests and affections—a people united together by the sacred ties of commonality and the free institutions purchased by our fathers with their blood, and bequeathed by them to us as a blessed and inalienable inheritance.

Plot Against Mr. Lincoln.

Among those who have been most indignant at the sudden passage of Mr. Lincoln through to Washington direct, was the police marshal of Baltimore, Mr. Geo. P. Kane. What is our surprise, then, to find the following editorial paragraph in the Baltimore American:

"Marshal Kane informs us that he did give the information to Mr. Corwin and other friends of Mr. Lincoln, so that the change of route and incognito entrance to Washington was caused by a desire to escape from his pretended friends here, and thus prevent a breach of the peace that would have been disgraceful to Baltimore and derogatory to American character. We do not believe there was any intention to assault or even insult the President-elect on the part of any portion of our community, but it is a notorious fact that the Baltimore Republican Committee, who proceeded to Harrisburg, and declared their determination to escort Mr. Lincoln to his quarters, would have been insulted, and pelted with eggs, if not otherwise maltreated. This would have involved Mr. Lincoln in the disturbance, and we cannot but think that he acted wisely under the information communicated by Col. Kane, in preventing the possibility of such an occurrence or the fears by our police authorities."

The information communicated by Marshal Kane was to the effect mentioned by the American in the paragraph printed in italics. How such a disgraceful riot as this could have occurred without great danger to Mr. Lincoln, we cannot perceive, and it is obvious that this pretext of excuse of assaulting the Baltimore committee was a mere dodge of the conspirators to cover up their real designs. It is amusing to read the indignant comments of the Baltimore Sun and other papers on this move of Mr. Lincoln, knowing as we do, that the Sun has from the start, both with the disunionists. All this cheap thunder about the fair fame of Baltimore will not answer. The city is disgraced and cannot escape that disgrace without ferreting out and punishing the miscreants who had concocted the plot. Not need Marshal Kane necessitate other people to tell them who they are, for it seems by the above paragraph that he unknowingly knows them.—Phila. N. American.

A SECRETARY VIEW OF SECESSION.—The Waco (Texas) Democrat says, in relation to secession: "On the 31st of August next you will owe $800,000; if the government goes on in peace. If secession comes, then you owe at least $25,000,000. Now let the Legislature meet the issue. Money must come. We may raise the tax, assess $20 per head at first; negro, $1 per head on stock, 10 cents per acre on lands. Let our people make up their mind to go up the cash. Those who dance must pay the fiddler." Down with your dollars. Up with your taxes. Secession and taxation have joined hands."

New States and Territories.

Kansas made our thirty-fourth state. It also removed one territory from our list. New Mexico will make the thirty-fifth, and will take another territory from our list. But with the addition of the three new territories just ordered by Congress to be organized, we shall have a list of six in all, viz: Dakota, Washington, Utah, Colorado, Decotah, Nevada, all in a fair way to become states before the close of the next ten years. They will atone for the loss of the seceding states, and should the latter not return, the next states will increase the array to thirty-six without them. Such is the growth of this Union.—Phila N. American.

A GOOD preacher in Maine, who experienced great trouble during the last political campaign, on account of his divisions in his flock, resolved that he would make a final effort before giving up all hope. He decided to preach a "democratic" sermon, and dressed to an Democratic pattern and of the importance of preaching democratic doctrine, he thought, he would be kindly heard. So he took for his text the following: "Now there was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day." He then proceeded to show that the rich man was a Republican, and a Republican must go to hell from the start.

The Effects of an Adjustment.

As there is evidently a swiftly growing disposition in the South toward a return to allegiance to the Federal Government, there naturally arise thoughts as to the probable effects of such an arrangement of the disputes between the two sections as would not be dishonorable to either. Never before have the wheels of material progress been so thoroughly stopped, in our land, by a panic that was not founded on loss of crops or over speculation; therefore the reaction would be of a different nature from any preceding ones. Our recovery from all previous panics has been gradual; but it seems as if when the returning flood tide once starts, now, it will come up like that of the Bay of Fundy or those of the rivers of Central America.

On that day when the telegraph flashes throughout the land the tidings that an honorable arrangement has been made, a greater change will come over the face of our social and commercial worlds than was witnessed even when the news reached us that the war of 1812 was at an end. Then the country was impoverished. Not only had trade languished for many months, but immense sums had been spent in war, and merchants had lost much through privateers. But now, in the North, at least, in every part except Kansas, we are waiting to push into all natural activities, the moment the good news is announced.

Never was there so much capital lying idle. Europe has flooded us with bullion. Western crops are so great that they have compelled several channels of commerce into activity in spite of their disinclination. Our manufactories will, apparently, have beside the ordinary impulse given by the cessation of a long resting time, that of a reasonable tariff. The change will, in fact, be as great as that so graphically narrated in the venerable fable, where, after such a combination of obstinacies, the ox began to drink the water; the water began to quench the fire; the fire began to burn the stick; the stick began to beat the dog, &c.

Government officials will hie with alacrity and firm confidence to their posts, proud of their country, and calmly enduring the sneers of foreigners. In view of the fact that the United States are more firmly united than ever—united, too, not by the compulsion of the ungovernable, but by the consent of the governed. Government securities will rise even higher than "93," at which figure they were going off nearly in New York yesterday. The whole everlasting Yankee nation, which has been spoiling for a trade so long, and savagely fumbling with the doubloons in its plethoric breeches' pockets, and growling about the low rates of interest, will launch out into a frenzy of merchandising; and the danger is that it will take to speculating as furiously as the mother English took to dissipating after the interregnum of Cromwell.

All the sluice gates of commerce will be thrown wide, especially if the reaction comes in time for the usual spring trade, that some of the flimsy gates will suffer damage. Ships will scud over all seas with every rag flying. Staid Eastern steamer captains will be found sitting on the safety valves, in emulation of their Western confreres. Locomotives will puff and snort before impossible trains, until they have to relinquish a few rears. Merchants, palaces and palatial stores, which have been at a discount, will suddenly be in great demand.

Any quiet person who has stood gazing, in perennial amazement, at the alternations of fierce animosity and exquisite tenderness displayed toward him by some passionate but good natured friend, will know what a change will come over the manners of Southerners toward Northerners. Whereas any one who voted for Lincoln was in danger of hanging a few weeks since, if he ventured South, Northerners who go below after the change will be greeted with the exclamation, Art from the North? Then come to me arms.

There will be a sudden disappearance of shabby vestments. Old coats and hats, that were good enough, will be found to be intolerable. Dresses will suddenly change their hues in the eyes of the wearers, who had not before perceived that they were faded. The long deferred piano, and horse and carriage will be purchased. Mechanics and their wives will suddenly expand their shopping operations so as to cause a thrill of joy on Second street. The new coat of paint and other luxuries will be added to many an humble dwelling. Patches, whether on shoes or knees, will be voted obsolete. Taffy and oranges will rise. The days of figs only twenty-five cents a box will be seen no more. Verbum sap.—Phil. Bulletin.

A Protective Tariff.

When the friends of Lincoln and Hamlin promised to the people of Pennsylvania a protective tariff, they did not count without their host. The Morrill Tariff bill had already passed the lower House of Congress, and it contained the full measure of encouragement for domestic industry desired by the manufacturing interests. The Chicago Convention unhesitatingly adopted the policy of protections as one of its cardinal principles, as vital as any pertaining to the territories. Upon this test we entered the canvass, and upon it our commonwealth was borne triumphantly upon the waves of a great revolution. We have now witnessed the fulfilment of our pledge. The Morrill Tariff bill has passed both houses in the same concurrent shape, and now only needs the signature of the President to become the validity of a law of the land. How greatly we rejoice at this we need not say. It is a matter we have never lost sight of, even when it seemed to have passed completely away from the public mind, to be superseded by other more exciting topics. It never could have been brought forward again so prominently as to achieve success but for the stand assumed by our noble State. We have fought this great battle at times almost alone. Wall street States were deeply interested in protection, they have appeared to set more value upon questions affecting the institutions of distant and unpeopled territories. But for the untiring pen of Henry C. Carey, and his great personal influence, we doubt very much whether the present success would not have been postponed several years. But it has come suddenly and brilliantly, and over it there should be a sound of rejoicing all over Pennsylvania, and, indeed, wherever American industry has friends.—Phila. N. American.

The Worst Treason Yet.

Let no man bate a jot of his indignation at the foul treason of General Twiggs. There is no possible excuse or palliation for it. He has deliberately planned for months to place our whole army in Texas, near 3,000 men, in the power of the Secessionists, with all the Government property and stores, amounting to between one and two millions of dollars. It is some relief to hear that many of the officers and men will refuse to follow him, and that his name will be ignominiously stricken from the army roll.

Let no sophistry be tolerated on this point. The limitations of honor and of treachery are clearly marked in such a case. If Gen. Twiggs chose to leave the service of the United States, it was open to him at any time honorably to resign his commission. If he then chose to join the Southern Confederacy, he would have stood upon the footing of any private citizen, and might have taken service in their army. But this is entirely a different thing from tampering with the officers and men of our army, and endeavoring to turn over the very men entrusted to his command to a foreign power, and seizing, in fact, stealing the property of the United States. Such conduct is precisely that of Benedict Arnold. The cases are strictly parallel. We trust that the vehement indignation of every honest man will pursue the traitor, and that his name will go down with execration on the page of history. A man of honor is such in all circumstances. Whatever he feels it his duty to do, he always does it in an honorable way. The whole world distinguishes between honorable and foul treachery. And we must say that the manner of this is rapidly lowering Southern character in the eyes of the civilized world.—Phila. Bulletin.

THE WORLD SURELY MOVES.—It is not a little singular that while the work of destruction is going on in America, Liberty is germinating on the shores of Africa! The Bey of Tunis has granted a constitution, containing provisions for perfect security of life and property; equal taxation; entire freedom of religious worship; limitation of the period of military service; fair trade, insured by a tribunal of commerce (a singularly liberal measure), equality in the eye of the law, regardless of caste, and the full right of foreigners as to property, &c.

IT COBB has failed to be made Treasurer of the new Confederacy, his former Deputy, Clayton, has been more fortunate. If deemed too great a knave himself to be trusted, it must be some consolation to find his first lieutenant confided in.—Albany Evening Journal.

LINES

Composed on the death of Jane D. Richards, infant son of John and Anne Richards, aged two years, three months and twelve days.

After a short and severe illness, which he bore with remarkable patience, he fell asleep in Christ and in peace. He died as he lived, sweetly, gently, in short. The Reaper said, "It is enough; come up higher." So our child, happy spirit, moved!

Farewell! The early flown that fell
Upon thy grass-grown bed
Are like the thoughts that now recall
Thy memory, sweet child!
Farewell! Thy sunny form shall dwell
Long in our hearts, and thy
Sweet voice, that was so musical,
Is treasured vividly within.
Farewell! Thy spirit, pure and free,
Is where no shadows fall
Upon the heart, and there shall be
No parting, early child!

HENRY H. COSTAR.—All the persons I have had to kill your Exterminator have actually left-tained of the house, by the Roaches very overwhelming. I purchased a box of your Exterminator and tried it, and in one week there was not a Roach or Mouse in the house.
JOHN B. GIVENS, No. 94 Rim Street.

HOUSEKEEPERS—Troubled with vermin, need by no no longer. Costar's Exterminator, warranted to destroy them, if in our satisfaction, and if a box cost $5, we would have it. We had tried everything we heard of, but these Exterminators alone kill them. We tried them in Bedbugs and Roaches, exterior than we can write it. It is in great demand at our store, and sells well.—Sun.

MORE GRAIN and provisions are destroyed annually in Great Britain by vermin than would pay for the cost of this Rat and Insect Killer.—Lancaster, (Eng.) Herald.

HENRY H. COSTAR—Your Exterminator is received, good, and is succeeded a decided success. We used a box of it, and the very Rats and Mice disappeared our premises—called dead—that night was a caution to sinners. Since then we do not see or hear of them. Yours, &c.
Stores Then we do not see or Some has been heard to Kitchen of cellar.—Bangor (Iowa) Times.
