CITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD.

(ADDITIONAL ON FIRST PAGE.)

Flitting Day.

Feasting is one of the most important in the whole year in Scotland—being set apart and entirely dedicated to the northmen to flitting, as they very aptly term their annual removal from one place of abode to another. Unlike their stand brethren the English—who for generations and generations occupy the same old homestead in which their sires lived and died—the Caledonians consider it almost imperatively necessary to change their residence each year. The mania for moving is so great, especially among the residents of the larger cities, that first class lodgings are often exchanged for meagre and inferior accommodations, simply to satisfy the inordinate desire for flitting. The law prescribes that the landlord shall visit the tenant on the 23d of February (Candlemas Day) for the purpose of ascertaining whether he intends remaining the following year or not. If the answer is in the negative—which it generally has small sign of "a house to let" is immediately nailed over the street door, where it remains until a new tenant is obtained.

An ancient statute, which was passed, we believe, in the reign of Robert the First, makes it a trespass to occupy the house you are about to quit after twelve o'clock on Flitting Day. In order to evade the penalty affixed to this law, all the moving is done in the morning of course there is no time wasted, everywhere is bustle, confusion and excitement. Here is a poor 'ore-burdened' night tradesman staggering beneath the weight of his entire household effects; presently he comes in contact with another person similarly burthened, a crash follows, the fragments of a looking glass, or some article of queensware strew the pavement, both become irritated, and not unfrequently a fisticuff encounter is the ultimatum. But no one stops to look at them, the tide of flitters are only intent on one object, and that is to reach their new quarters before noon. To a stranger, these scenes are both unique and amusing, and no doubt has the effect of awakening a great deal of surprise in a casual sojourner in Scotland, for the reason that unlike the Italian or Frenchman, they are not given to excite mirth of any kind, and are known as one of the most stolid, and indifferent people in existence.

Amusements.

The grand pageantry display made by Mike Lipman's famous circus, upon the principal streets yesterday, may give the reader an idea of his mammoth combination. At Red Lion they are holding forth nightly to audiences so closely packed that a shingle could not be wedged in. The circus is immense, the actors splendid, and the performances unique. Every body who enjoys lofty tumbling, break neck riding, terrific vaulting, and the ludicrous follies of the clowns, should go and see the circus. It is well worthy of a visit.

Buckley's serenaders, a minstrel troupe, of wonderful ability and combination of talent, are drawing crowded houses at Masonic Hall. We do not advise our readers to attend, unless they are of such a temperament that they can withstand the most provoking jokes and eccentricities of the cork brigade. Fearless, however, They are among the best performers in that line in this country.

The music loving portion of the community will be delighted to learn that the pupils of Professor Clement Tetedoux purpose giving one of their popular concerts at Masonic Hall on Thursday the 31st instant. We doubt very much whether there are in this city any better vocalists than those taught by Professor Tetedoux, and certainly the concerts hitherto given under his auspices have been grand successes.

Heller, the wonderful, is coming to this city, to give a few of his great entertainments. He is a prodigy of magicians in the world, and must be equal to Gottschalk upon the piano, his will draw crowded houses, as the amusement-loving portion of the community are already excited over his promised advent in the city. Reserved seats can be obtained without extra charge, at Kleber and Mellor's music stores to-day.

Tonight at the Opera House Stewart Robson takes a benefit. He is a first class actor, and has had quite a successful engagement here. He is ably supported by the excellent stock company at the Opera House. Let the young commodian have a crowded house.

At the Theatre the magnificent Leo Hudson, with her wonderful "Mazeppa" steed, draws large houses. She takes a benefit tonight, upon which occasion she appears in some of her best characters. She is an animated actress, and is supported in good manner by the talented stock company of the old theatre.

A Horse Thief, Bigamist and Forger.

An individual named Templeton, who has been living at Shippensburg Pa., for about a year past, was arrested at Baltimore on last Friday for horse-stealing and brought to this city jail, where he awaits trial. He combines the rather singular characters of a horse thief, a forger and a bigamist, and by committing the one offence opened the way for the detection of his guilt of the others. Some time since he stole a horse from Dr. Howland, of Shippensburg, which he carried across the mountains and traded to a negro. He took the other horse to the top of the Alleghenies, where he sold him to a respectable farmer, taking his note at six months in payment. This note he negotiated and received the money on another besides, which he had forged, adding one more grave offence to his manifold sins.

At Shippensburg he had married a respectable woman, but it seems he had another wife at or near Altoona, and after stealing Dr. Howland's horse he went to where she was living. On an examination of his pockets, a privilege which we believe wives generally claim, she found a letter from another woman claiming to be "Mrs. Templeton," and as the name of a lady of this place was mentioned in the letter, the wife No. 1, addressed herself to the Shippensburg lady in a note inquiring after the wife No. 2. It was subsequently developed through the correspondence which ensued that the poor girl had been induced into marrying him at Shippensburg, was in reality the third or fourth wife upon whom he had bestowed the name of Templeton. While living at Shippensburg he bore a fair character, and the good people of that village were considerably astonished when the multitude of his enormities were unmasked.

Schools for Soldiers' Orphans.

The number of applicants from the western portion of the State having increased so rapidly, it has been concluded to establish additional schools for soldiers' orphans. Thos. H. Burrowes, of Lancaster, Superintendent of soldiers' orphans, having this object in view, in a card announces that he will attend at the Monongahela House, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday, June 5th, 1866, to confer with principals or owners of academies or seminaries, who may be willing to devote their property and efforts to this purpose. Present accommodations for not less than seventy-five pupils of both sexes, and from ten to sixteen years of age, are required in each case, with an understanding that the capacity of each institution accepted be increased, as soon as practicable, so as to accommodate one hundred and fifty pupils, with not less than twenty acres of arable land and the necessary outbuildings, &c., for farming and gardening, attached to each. One such school is desirable in the district composed of Erie, Warren, Venango and Crawford counties. One in the district composed of Clarion, Armstrong, Jefferson and Indiana. One in the district composed of Fayette, Greene, Washington, Allegheny and Westmoreland. One in the district composed of Somerset, Bedford, Blair and Cambria. One in or near the county of Elk. Inquiries by letter for further particulars will be promptly attended to.

Pittsburgh Gas Savings Company.—We learn that about Ten thousand dollars of the stock of this company remains untaken and is open for subscription to-morrow at four o'clock p. m. There can be no doubt, but this stock will eventually prove very valuable, and as but one day more remains for subscribing, capitalists should at once give the matter their attention. The book are at the office of the Cash Insurance Company, No. 59 Fourth street.

Leg Amputated.—On Wednesday a son of Mr. John Swinebery, living in Penn township, met with a serious accident at Armstrong's coal works. While attempting to get on a train of coal cars, he accidently fell upon the track, and several cars passed over one of his legs, crushing it into terrible manner. Drs. Hamilton and Fifer amputated the limb above the knee, and hopes are entertained of the boy's surviving the operation.

Sentenced.—We forgot to notice the fact in yesterday's Gazette that Henry Little, of Birmingham, convicted of attempting to pass counterfeit Government money, was sentenced to three years imprisonment and to pay a fine of one hundred dollars.

Collided.—A carriage containing two ladies came in collision with a car of the Minersville Passenger Railway, yesterday, at the intersection of Grant and Fifth streets. One wheel of the carriage was broken off, but the ladies escaped injury.

Railed.—William Wilson, steamboat engineer, accused of dealing in counterfeit current money, was discharged from jail yesterday, bail in the sum of $3,000 having been entered for his appearance.

Explanation.—It was the man who sweeps the market, not the Market Constable, Mr. Thomas, who had the difficulty a few days ago as noticed in the Gazette.

Mr Seward's Vagaries.

EDITORS GAZETTE:—We ask permission to notice, through your columns, some of the vagaries enunciated by Mr. seward in his Auburn speech. We by no means intend to review the speech as such, but mere's to glance at some of its absurdities.

He says: "The national life already hangs on the issue of a victory so in war. It now rests on the issue of reconstruction in peace." Again in the same sentence he asks: "What does the country actually need? Most persons say reconstruction. I think it needs no such thing. The country is reconstructed already. We do not recognize that what has not been destroyed. The political system of 1787, constructed by our forefathers, stands now firm, complete, compact, and perfect just as it came from the builders' hands." Well that's news, I hope these builders will next it wherever they may see fit to appear. Perhaps some of them should ask to see for themselves, and ask Mr. Seward to accompany them to the Capitol, there to salute all their old friends, and insist on shaking hands with the Senators and Representatives of South Carolina. Mr Seward would have to say that they were not exactly in Well, let us see what Virginia, or Tennessee, or Alabama, or any of those chaps that tried to get out of the Union and couldn't. What would Mr. Seward say? Well I guess he would tell them that they were not here yet, but that they were coming—that he coming—they couldn't get out of the Union.

Again, "Others say that the country needs to the creation of a new element in the nation. I think it needs no such thing. I have passed that point." Now, if that means anything, it means that the Union has been broken and that it has been restored. In short, Mr. Seward says "The national life now hangs on reconstruction in peace. But it has hung on that sentence ever since it was spo
