ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

It has fallen to the lot of no constituent assembly to have higher and more important duties devolved upon it than the American Congress, whose first session has just closed. Excepting a comparatively few members the two Houses were chosen during the progress of the great rebellion, and convened within a few months of the cessation of actual hostilities. Considerably more than two-thirds of the members of both chambers were elected by the party that, with most heroic energy and self-sacrifice, sustained the government, and upheld the honor of the nation throughout the war. In point of intellectual endowments and moral qualities no abler or better men were ever delegated to perform a public trust. Of course, individual exceptions can be pointed out to this remark, but on the whole no representative body in this country, or any other, ever contained a larger amount of talent or patriotism.

However the case may appear to men who do not know experimentally what it is to be overmastered by a great and disinterested emotion—to be ruled, not simply on the surface, but down into the inner recesses of their being, by a cardinal principle that subordinates to itself all other ends and aims—the men, on whom the chief burden rested of sustaining the government were thoroughly imbued not only with the sentiment of national unity, but with the higher feeling that the Union was intended to mean personal and political liberty to all born or naturalized under the flag, and an example and light to all other peoples struggling against despotisms up to independence and enfranchisement. It happens, necessarily, that such men are in earnest. They do not view politics as a game to be played with skill but not with feeling—the end being simply personal promotion and party ascendency. They see that politics inevitably involves sacred rights, privileges, and results—the highest next to religion itself—and that deviations from recognised principles are as culpable in this domain as in any other.

An appeal having been made from the Constitution and the Laws to the arbitrament of the sword—and the march of events, under the leadings of Providence, having eventuated in a decree of liberty for all the inhabitants of the land—the loyal representatives of the nation, following as well their own instincts as the promptings of those by whom they were elected, determined to make this decree much more than a shadow and an enigma—a splendid reality, a vitalizing and revivifying force. What happened? Being earnest men, they are misunderstood by those who are not. Some look on, with whom this great drama is only a play. They wore masks and paraded through all its mighty scenes without comprehending that it touched not only the springs of the nation's life, but the cords of liberty, for all men throughout the coming generations. They are still inclined to treat it as a masquerade, and they carp and cavil at all whose levity is not equal to their own.

In laying anew the foundations of the government, the labors of Congress would have been arduous under the most favorable circumstances. They have been vastly increased by the recreancy of the President. Born and reared in a Southern State; a Democrat by profession, but with some antipathies against slavery, not so much on the score of principle as by reason of disparagements to which he was subjected by the slave barons on account of his obscure birth and lowly breeding; carried beyond his convictions by the powerful impulse of the struggle, and by that inordinate oppugnancy which is a predominant trait of his organization; when the war-cloud rolled away and the calm of peace settled down once more upon the land, a reaction came over him, and he reverted measurably to his original position. He saw accomplished all he really desired in the crushing of the rebellion. At his side—the chief of his Cabinet—was a statesman as richly endowed, both by nature and education, as any personage of this century. Cool, sagacious, subtle—a machiavelian spirit—with whom words and phrases, principles and interests, are counters in a stately game—nourishing a personal grief, and watching to revenge the blighting of his ultimate ambition—ready to blot the brilliant record of a long career, to cast a dark shadow over his just renown, and stop the dignity of his soul, that he might appease his insatiable wrath. Near him was another—once in President LINCOLN's Cabinet—a man of ordinary powers, but restless and implacable—thrown up to prominence by some inexplicable casualty—and with few sympathies common with those among whom he cast his lot, by whim or calculations ejected from his place in obedience to the demand of the National Convention he has demonstrated ever since the mistake made in his elevation and the justice of the sentence by which he was deposed. These three devised a scheme for putting themselves at the head of the party of reaction, for the purpose of stopping the flow of events and turning back the current as far as practicable. They entered into a league, offensive and defensive, with the rebels, and their friends at the North. They practiced concealments and duplicities from the beginning of the session to near its close, claiming to be still republicans when they were not—to be acting with the party to which they owed power, when they were only endeavoring to detach men from its support, to undermine its influence, and consign it to humiliation and disgrace.

Under such circumstances the task of Congress was exceedingly hard. If the President and Cabinet had maintained their integrity, if they had co-operated with Congress, as the people by whom they were chosen desired, the work of reconstruction would have been speedily accomplished, and on a basis securing the just rights of all, and promotive of permanent peace and harmony. As the case stood the Executive Department became a fortress, into which the defeated rebels ran for security, and in which all manner of plots were hatched against the loyal portion of the nation and their representatives. The marvel is not, that for a time the action of Congress was confused and discordant; but that at last the majority in the Houses, detecting the traps and pitfalls set for them, were able to come to substantial agreement, on middle and safe ground, and erect some efficient barriers against the surrender of the government into the hands of its adversaries.

The whole matter now goes to the people, under the provisions of the Constitution and Laws, for their determination. Most of the Republican members of Congress have been or will be re-nominated; certainly almost all who have acted conspicuous parts. Allegations have been freely made that these members, regardless of their obligations to their respective constituencies, and animated solely by a spirit of faction, were bent upon a policy the people did not demand and would not sustain. Hence, the issue is fairly made up. The loyal people of this country own the government, and have a right to do with it as they will. The opportunity is now presented them either to rebuke their immediate representatives, or to pronounce a formal approval of their conduct. We feel no apprehensions as to the result. Whatever differences may have temporarily existed in consequence of the craft and guile of the President and his followers, the real issue is now understood, the hearts of the masses of the people are sound and true, and a verdict will be rendered confirming the views of Congress and bidding them go back to the discharge of their duties next December with the assurance of such popular support as can neither be despised nor resisted.

THE CANVASS.

So far the democratic mass convention at Reading may be regarded as the only note-worthy demonstration made by either political party in this commonwealth since the nomination of candidates for Governor. That demonstration fell far short of the expectations of those who were concerned in getting it up. Quite a number of notable persons were in attendance from remote portions of the State. Some delegations were secured from adjoining counties. But the mass of the democrats of Berks were too intent on securing their crops, or pursuing their other vocations to break away and listen to stale addresses on political questions. It may be safely affirmed that no election for Governor, has happened during the last quarter of a century that did not elicit a greater degree of democratic enthusiasm in that stronghold.

The comparative apathy disclosed in Berks county is apparent in democratic ranks in all parts of the State. Election results for some years past have not been calculated to create animation. The democrats have been so often and so signally rebuked at the ballot box, that they have lost that confident bearing which formerly characterized them. Most of their leaders are engaged in searching for new issues and in projecting new alliances which shall furnish encouragement. Profiting by the discipline of the war they have renounced the doctrine of State Rights, which was the germ of secession and of the dogma that it is unconstitutional to coerce a State, and claim to be pre-eminently the Union men of the nation. The new shibboleth sticks in their mouth so badly they make bungling work in pronouncing it, and the unwonted sounds abash and confound their followers.

Some expectations of a more promising aspect of affairs are indulged from the action of the Philadelphia Convention. But if anything can be prognosticated from the discordant clatter of tongues which now prevails touching that convocation—who are elegible to seats in it, what topics shall be proposed and discussed; and what measures recommended—it is that no substantial results will flow therefrom. Of course it will resolve to demand the immediate and unconditional admission of the Southern delegations to seats in Congress; for that measure is acceptable to all the disloyal elements in the nation, and to all the elements outside that are opposed to our ultimate harmony and continued greatness. Beyond that, the deliberations do not promise unity of method or result.

Awhile ago no little uncertainty was imparted to movements on the Republican side by diverse conceptions of the President's Policy, and consequently, of contradictory action relative to him and it. Not a few of our leaders seemed inadquately to comprehend the situation; and some manifested a disposition to succumb to blandishments or threatenings rather than continue a contest the end of which they could not distinctly foresee, and which might subject them to loss of positions of emolument or honor." After a time the nature of the issue was brought out in vivid relief, so that no mistake could be made concerning it. Directly all uncertainty vanished from the Republican ranks, and a closing up and preparation for united exertion was entered upon. It is exhilerating to witness the auspicious change in this particular that a month has wrought.

To-day the Republican army in Pennsylvania presents as compact a front as at any former period. A few conspicious defections exist, but not more formidable in numbers and influence than always happens in political organizations of any sort. A good deal of preparatory work has been performed in disseminating intelligence by means of the press and soliciting local candidates, and soon the labor of oral discussions in mass meetings will commence in earnest. We have no fears of the result. The patriotic party that not only held Pennsylvania to its allegiance during the rebellion, but made it a pillar of strength to the national cause, will again carry its flag in triumph from the Ohio to Lake Erie, and from Lake Erie to the Delaware, and roll its anthem of victory over the tops of the Alleghenies.

—The old Greek proverb that "there is many a slip between the cup and the lip," is likely to be again verified in the case of the great estate which was said to have fallen to Mr. Walker, of Hartford, Conn., by the death of some distant relatives in England. The announcement of this piece of good luck has been pretty extensively advertised in the papers of the United States, and the result has brought to light a long lost brother of Mrs. Walker's father. Mr. John Church, living near Buffalo, New York, who by reason of his priority of birth claims to have a better title to the property.

Darwin Merrill, accused of the murder of his brother, in Wyandot county, last September, has just been tried, in Crawford county, for murder in the first degree, and acquitted on the ground of self-defense. The verdict gave great satisfaction to the community generally at Bucyrus, but great dissatisfaction to the people of Upper Sandusky, who have made some unwarranted public demonstration, by way of resolutions, condemning the Court and Jury.

—There were seven hundred and sixteen deaths in Philadelphia last week—something unprecedented for that city. Of these eight were caused by cholera, and forty-four by sunstroke. This unusual mortality is ascribed to the extreme heat, which was greater than has been known there since 1778. The deaths for the corresponding week last year were not so many by two hundred and seventy-three.

PROPOSALS.

PENNSYLVANIA

Agricultural Land Scrip for Sale.

THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT having granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Land Scrip, representing 780,000 acres of Public Land, for the endowment of Agricultural Colleges in this State, the Board of Commissioners now offer this Land Scrip to the public.

Proposals for the purchase of this Land Scrip, addressed to "The Board of Commissioners of Agricultural Land Scrip," will be received at the Surveyor General's Office, at Harrisburg, until Wednesday, August 15, 1866.

This land may be located in any State or Territory, by the holders of the scrip, upon any of the unappropriated lands (except mineral lands) of the United States which may be subject to sale at private entry. Each piece of scrip represents a quarter section of one hundred and sixty acres. Bids must be made as per acre, and no bids will be received for less than one quarter section.

The Scrip will be issued immediately on the payment of the money to the Surveyor General, one-third of which must be paid within ten days and the remaining two-thirds within thirty days after notification of the acceptance of the bid, or bids by the Board of Commissioners.

J. M. CAMPBELL,
Surveyor General,
jy27-g10 For the Board of Commissioners.
