Sunday School Lesson

THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP

International Sunday School Lesson for March 11, 1945

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."—Matt. 22: 37-39.

Lesson Text: Matthew 19: 16-26, 29.

From time immemorial mankind has speculated upon the mystery beyond the grave. During the time of Jesus the same problem confronted the earnest individual and our lesson today is based upon a question asked the Great Teacher, how eternal life might be attained.

We are told that the person making this inquiry was wealthy. We know that he lived morally and took a great interest in the religious affairs of his community, for he was a ruler of the local synagogue. His manner of life, externally, had been exemplary, for he could confidently assure Jesus that he had observed certain commandments consistently. Yet, this rich young churchman had not reached the correct answer to his own question.

Jesus, in order to bring out the lesson he sought, replied by reciting the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth commandments, adding thereto a general summary of them, "thou shall love thy neighbor as thyself." As to these, the young man could say he had been faultless in their observance, and, although realizing the importance of these things, he asked what further requirement was lacking. Knowing his devotion to riches, Jesus pointed out that his dependence upon them stood between him and perfection.

Jesus did not give similar advice to every wealthy man or woman with whom he came in contact, for we know that Martha, Mary and Lazarus were rich, and it is fair to assume, as Bishop Potter dies, that, "wealth has duties to perform in the constitution of our modern society," which "poverty could never perform. The progress of science, of the arts, of higher education, the organized efforts of philanthropy, require capital in the hands of a few just as truly as trade requires capital."

"Jesus was the world's greatest psychologist," says Charles Foster Kent, "No one has analyzed the motives in the mind of man as did he. No one appreciated more clearly than he how great an obstacle the possession of riches placed in the way of a man's obtaining the highest development and fullest measure of his ability.

"At the same time, his scientific impartiality is shown by the statement that it was not absolutely impossible for a man to surmount this obstacle. It called, however, for divine help. To discharge one's obligations as a social citizen, far more of the love and power of God is required in the heart of the rich man than of the man with moderate means."

When one realizes that the American people spend approximately twice as much for tobacco as they do for the support of all Protestant churches, the hospitals and colleges in this country, and fully half again as much for gasoline to ride about on pleasure trips, the need for an additional realization of the spiritual responsibilities involved in the proper use of wealth becomes apparent.

It is not enough that a man be honest, thrifty and benevolent in financial matters, but he should recognize that he holds material possessions only as a trustee, that they are not paramount to spiritual values, and that as a Christian he is obliged to control and use his wealth for the benefit of humanity and the promotion of human happiness.

The idea of stewardship shou'd not be confined to money, however, but applies with equal force to the use of our physical strength, the abilities and capacities which we may possess, and the employment of the years of life which we are given to enjoy and use.

If we hold a proper conception of this responsibility, the possession of great riches will not over-shadow in our minds the supreme purpose of life, to so live that we may have and enjoy that eternal life about which the young ruler questioned. Jesus did not concern himself with bestowing earthly benefits and privileges for as said by Caleb D. Bradlee, his attitude is represented by this imaginary statement: "I do not concern myself about these small matters, but I can promise you rest, peace, joy, opportunity, honor, and glory in the Celestial Kingdom."
