

FACULTY SPOTLIGHT

by Robert Fogarty

Professor Andrew Kafka, instructor of Speech and English, has long been interested in the spoken word in literature and all phases of language. He has been lecturing and writing, both in professional and private life, on a number of related skills, such as speaking, writing, and reading.

He has Masters Degrees in both English and Educational Guidance from Columbia University, where he has completed all his PhD. courses.

Serving as faculty moderator to Belles-Lettres Society, and as faculty advisor to the Hazleton Campus Alumni Association, he is kept very busy on campus. He is also very active in many off-campus activities.

While devoting much of his time to academic pursuits, he still manages to have a few hobbies. He is an avid follower of sports, both as a spectator and as a participant, boxing and squash being his favorites.

SORORITY HOLDS INITIATION

Formal initiation was held Thursday, October 3, for all new members of the Theta Sigma Pi Sorority. Girls took their pledges in the candle-lit lounge. This initiation was held under the guidance of Mrs. Elizabeth Bodenstein, sorority advisor.

Bonnie Penkala, sorority president made the announcement that a hayride will be held Saturday, October 26. This hayride will be limited to 22 couples. Any girl wishing to attend should contact Bonnie.

CUSTOM WEEK HAPPENINGS

by Rich Dino

Take a look at these familiar "sites". They are from l to r—Frank Sacco, Dave Chamberlain, Don Padova, and Dennis Boyle.

If a member of the older generation was strolling on campus the week of September 23, and did not know anything about the adventures of a college freshman the first week of school, he would have thought that all of us have gone "snakey".

What would he have seen? Well, to put a long story short let's think back to that famous week called Customs Week. As he entered the campus he would have seen 18 and 19 year old students walking around with the tingle of a crawling infant. Immediately, doubt would enter his mind. He might have thought that he was being put back in time because people with blue caps on their heads were walking backwards. As he moved into the campus, clearing his vision about the trees, he sees a big grown up kneeling down and roaring like a lion. After finding a safe hiding place, so he thinks, he turns around in wonder as to where a muffled tune is coming from. To his surprise, he finds a headless girl kneeling down under a cardboard box singing. He is beginning to wonder how he can get off the farm without being seen. He comes to a road and begins running downhill. What does he see? Boys with scarves, gloves, basketballs, croquet mallets, almost everything mentionable. He thought he saw a boy with a chicken on a leash, but he was relieved when it was only a mirage. Behind the boys were girls with different colored sox, signs of everything imaginable, and funny looking bows in their hair. Hiding in the woods, he uncovered two boys with closely shaven hair cuts. Finally he got to his car and sped away like a madman.

As we look back we can now laugh, but it wasn't funny then. So we rub our hands together saying, "Wait till next year". But now the fun is over, and it's down to work. We are in water over our heads, but we can still swim.
