Agricultural.

Swine and their Sties.

As land becomes cleared and farms regularly cultivated and improved, pigs have to be confined a portion of the year, and not allowed to leave the yard unless there is a particularly well fenced close for them to run in, which there should be on every farm adjoining the homestead; then in summer they can get half their living by grazing, and will grow faster, and come up to be fatted in healthy state, that they will thrive and lay on flesh and fat better for the liberty they have enjoyed. Sows kept up to breed will succeed in raising more and better little ones for ranging about a small field, with a pond or stream of water running through it, and if all are accustomed to go to their own sty every night, and each lot to be fed with some corn and grain, and the sows with some swill, &c., they will pay for the extra feed. The year before last I was on a place where there was no field or wood with a fence to prevent pigs from getting through or under, but there was a spacious yard into which the piggery opened, and every day the whole o them were turned into it. The last week in April a few acres of turnips were drilled on ridges drawn out on a poor sandy hill, which was become too weak to grow grain; about eight tons per acre of barnyard manure was covered in, and they came all right and did well. In the first week in July the bottoms were large enough to begin pulling, and the pigs had a one-horse cart load daily till the last week in September. The turnips were thrown about the yard and greedily devoured by the old and young, and they had nothing else till the corn was fit to husk, and no lot of pigs could have done better than they did, growing and keeping in good condition all the while, and towards the latter part of the time mentioned an extra load had to be occasionally fetched to them, on account of their increased size. Some of these pigs were miserably poor and crippled through previous restraint, and being fed on boiled kiln dust and bran, too thin to nourish them properly, but they recovered, and after harvest got very fat on corn and corn meal mixed with steamed swedes. However, though these turnips were produced at little expense, for they were only hoed once over by one man, and horse hoed between the rows twice, yet of course it would be still cheaper to have the pigs graze and the little they would require to help them with the grass would not cost so much as the turnips and the hauling them home. Thirty-four of these pigs weighed from 260 lbs. to 420 lbs., the rest being in a very profitable state when I left the place. I do not advocate cooking white turnips for pigs under any circumstances, they are only fit for them raw, in warm weather. Steamed swedes are good mixed with plenty of meal, but potatoes are so much better than half the meal mixed with them would feed as fast. Good winter quarters is a great step in the right direction; the sleeping apartment should run into a bank under other buildings or not, as convenient, and plenty of straw for them to creep under in cold spells will cause them to thrive as well as in warm weather.—Country Gent.

RECIPE TO CLEANSE WOOL.—Hunt Brothers, of the North Bloomfield Custom Wool Mill, New York, give the following recipe for cleansing wool:

"To two pailsful of water a quart of soft soap and half a pint of common salt. Heat from 150 degrees to 180 degrees—or a little warmer than the hand can bear. Put in all the wool that will stir conveniently, and let it remain fifteen minutes, moving it in the kettle occasionally. Then take it out, let it drain, return the drained liquor to the kettle and add all the water needed. Repeat the process, and occasionally add a little salt. After the wool is sufficiently cleansed, simply rinse it out well in cold water, and you will then have it white and soft. Never let wool boil in the liquor, as that will fix the gum, render the fiber stiff and gray and unfit it to make soft, flexible yarn.—Fine wool needs more time in the kettle than coarse. Taggings may be cleansed in the same manner, by clipping off the hard matter that cannot readily be compressed between the thumb and finger.—Rural New Yorker.

BALKING HORSES.—When a horse balks, he is excited, and does not know what you want him to do.—When he gets a little excited, stop him five or ten minutes; let him become calm, pat him, speak gently to him; and as soon as he is over his excitement, he will, in nine cases out of ten, pull at the word. Whipping, and slashing and swearing only make the matter worse. After you have gentled him awhile, and his excitement has cooled down, take him by the bits; turn him each way a few times as far as you can; pull out his tongue; gentle him a little; unrein him; then step before the balky horse and let the other start first; then you can take him any way you wish. A balky horse is always high-spirited and starts quick; half the pull is out before the others start. If a horse has been badly spoiled, hitch him to an empty wagon, and let him pull it around awhile on level ground; then put on a little load, and increase it gradually, caressing as before, and in a short time you can have a good working horse.

VARIOUS RECIPES.—A weak solution of saleratus, pretty strongly tinctured with alum, sprinkled over gooseberry bushes, is sure to prevent mildew. So says one who has experimented with it four years.

Cayenne pepper, mixed with fine road dust, sifted over young vines, will prevent their destruction by striped bugs. The same, mixed with a little sulphate of soda, and both mixed with moist meal, will save young chickens from death by "gapes."

A saturated solution of sulphate of iron (copperas) in which to soak seeds and roots of plants before putting in the ground, will protect them from all insects. Wash trees that are affected and it will rid them of their enemies.

MONDZIT—A beautiful flower that flourishes in secret places.
