Agricultural.

TAPPING SUGAR MAPLE TREES.

Years ago, when the country was new, it was no object to protect the maple, for the forests were broad, and sugar trees were growing thickly through a great portion of them. They fell with other trees, until the woodman's axe converted acres of forests into tillable fields leaving in many cases but a small nook of woodland upon the farm. For a few year past it has been noticed that maple trees are dying out faster than others.—Where but a short time ago thousands were used for sugar making, but hundreds stand to-day. The cause of this can be attributed to nothing but the scevere mode practiced in tapping.

The old plan of boxing with the axe was abandoned, and one supposed to less injurious adopted ; but since tapping with the bit has been practiced, maple trees have died faster than ever before. When an incision is made into the sap wood only, it will heal up, but when made deeper it never will and all the adjacent parts will die, and often decay.

Now, in proof of this, let any farmer examine two maples that have been tapped for a dozen or more years—one with the bit and the other with an axe or gouge—the cuts by the latter not made beyond the sap flowing wood. The inner wood of the former and much of the surface will be found dead, while the other, where it has sufficient time for healing, will be found to have formed a perfect gnarl, so tough and sound that it will be next to impossible to split a log of it, stove-wood length. Another proof of this may be made by noting the difference in the decrease of maples in different sugar orchads where the two modes have been practiced.

Trees tapped receiving the least injury are the most profitable, for the reason that the greater portion of sap flows from the wood near the bark.—When a tree is tapped with a bit, the spile stops up the best flowing grains. When an incision is made with a large auger or a gouge, more grains are opened, and of course a greater flow of sap obtained. It is a fact, however, thats tree tapped in this way, the wind dries up the wood sooner than when a bit is used, but this is easily prevented by frequent freshing over. Many farmers have, within a few years past, used sheet iron spiles and a large auger, and have found them profitable and less injurious to the trees than any other kind.

The spouts are made by cutting sheet iron strips two inches wide and ten or twelve inches long, bent hollow, and one end ground sharp. An auger one and one-fourth inches in size is used for tapping, the hole not being bored over three-eights of inch deep, and the spile driven into the bark beneath the cut with a square faced mallet. When freshing over, an auger is used each time one-eighth of an inch larger than the one before it, and the incision made but a shaving deeper. The spile will not have to be removed to do this.

If a farmer has not to hand the different sized augers, and does not wish to be to the expense of purchasing them, a two inch gouge may be made to answer every purpose. It should be ground thin and very sharp, and the cut made with it about two inches long and not over one-half an inch deep. The gouge may be taken along when gathering the sap, and any tree requiring it freshed in half a minute's time by taking off a thin shaving. There are other advantages in this mode of tapping, aside from the preservation of the trees ; more sugar can be made, for a greater flow of sap can be obtained, and no loss sustained by leakage, as around the common wood spile.—Ohio Farmer.

Poor Economy.—It is poor economy to let your stone heaps lay in the field year after year, and mow around them. My method is to pick my rocks in piles in the spring after harrowing in my grain and sowing my grass seed, which I think should not be harrowed in, only bushed or rolled. Stones can be picked much cleaner and cheaper then than at any other time. I haul them off in the fall after taking off the grain, if the ground is not too wet; if so, any time after it freezes. Any farmer can find time to clear off his fields and fit them for a mowing machine. Clear out all the fast rocks ahd fill up the holes. See to it yourself and dont trust it to the boys: once well done is twice done.

It si poor economy to drive cattle to your neighbors or to the spring to water, week after week, because your pump has failed. By so doing you not only trouble your neighbor but you lose money every time you take your cattle from the yard. If your pump is old and worn out, get a new one at once. I find the Moss pump to be the cheapest and best pump now in use.

It is poor economy to hitch colts in the barn floors, where they are liable to get hung with the halter ; poor economy too keep more hogs than you can well feed, and poor economy to feed meadow hay and straw to sheep or barely to horses.

It is poor economy to get in debt for anything you dont need, or borrow with no prospect to being able to pay.—Maine Farmer.

Preparing Feed for Steaming.—The cut hay, straw and hay or other cut feed, is moistened with a large watering pot (if done by hand,) at the rate of, at least two gallons of water to five bushels of feed, while being stirred up with a fork ; then if bran, meal or other feed is used with it, it shourld be sifted on and mixed evenly. Two quarts of bran to the bushel of straw will render wheat, barley, oats and pea-straw equal to timothy hay. A little salt should be added, which will be perfectly diffused through the mass. The feed must always be moistened before steaming, for steam will not cook dry hay or straw, but only dry it more. Moisture is required to absorb the steam.—Rural New Yorker.

Save your suds for garden plants, or for garden beds when sandy.

Alum or vinegar is good to set colors of red, green or yellow.

Those professors who after a short time turn away are like the new moon, which shines a little at the first part of the night, but it is soon down before half the night is over.
