Agricultural.

Hoed Crops.

Hoed crops are the most costly in labor of any which the farmer grows. Therefore, they should be the most profitable. The greatest difficulty which the farmer in his country has to contend with, in order to make his business profitable, is the price of labor; and, as he is obliged to bestow a great deal on his hoed crops, he should take care, by judicious management and use of the products, to make this outlay of capital remunerative. How to do this should be a subject of much thought.

Corn and potatoes are the most largely grown and important of this class of products. One rule which will apply to both, which the wise farmer will act upon, is to obtain as large a yield as posible from each acre planted. This will diminish the amount of labor in proportion to the product obtained. Every bushel will, therefore, cost less than when the yield is small. The next important point is to get the best return for the price. As corn is the great reliance of the stock feeder in this country, and as manure from stock is essential to grow continued large crops, it is obvious that skillful feeding to stock is the remunerative disposal that can be made of the corn crop. Hence, good breeds, ample shelter, and proper care, are indispensable adjuncts. In short, if labor has cost you too much, resolve to plant less ground, but raise more per acre. This can easily be done if you will only set about it.—Next, determine that your corn shall produce more pounds of meat per bushel than heretofore. This you can accomplish by a timely and judicious selection of improved breeds of stock, and more skill employed in handling them. No farmer should be satisfied if he cannot improve every year on his past method. Thought and energy applied to business will do this.

The potato crop is always sold for cash, and thus produces no manure for the land. For this reason, it is a very exhausting crop, and no farmer can persist long in growing it largely without imperoishing his land. On account of their bulk, potatoes cannot be grown profitably a great distance from market. On the right sort of land, and near market, they usually produce a good return of money per acre; and potato growers should devote part of the proceeds of the crop towards the purchasing of manure to renovate the land. Plant less, manure more, and your labor will bring greater profit.—Rural New Yorker.

Summer Care of Milch Cows.

Much has been said and written upon summer feeding or soiling, compared with pasturing. Here, as in many things which relate to agriculture, no definite rule can be given. We must be guided by the condition of the soil, location and other contingences. In sections where natural pasture lands are scarce, or where land is valued at a high price and is easily cultivated, the advantages of soiling can hardly be over estimated; while for the larger portion of New England it would not be economy to adopt this system to any great extent. Yet I think there are few, if any, dairymen, who would not find it to their advantage to cultivate a portion of green fodder, to keep up the flow of milk during the usually warm and dry months of August and September.—As food for soiling I would recommend mainly, clover, oats and corn. A few feeds of early sowed rye may be used to advantage from the 10th of May. This soon becomes woody and unpalatable, and is recommended only for green feed. Green clover, on rich land, will be fit to cut about the 20th of May, and will hold good until the middle of June. Oats should be sown early in April and again about the first of May, at the rate of four bushels to the acre. This will keep good the supply from June 15th till July 15th. By this time, corn planted the first week in May should be fit to cut. The planting should be continued at intervals of two weeks, until the 10th of July. Such a succession as this will afford a regular supply of succulent food until the first of October. The clover may be cut several times, either for summer or winter use, or the soil may be inverted and corn planted upon the same ground, which is cleared previous to the 10th of July, should be used for growing Swedish turnips. These I would sow in drills 30 inches apart, manuring in the drill, either with fresh manure from the cow sheds, with compost, or with special fertilizers. The latter I use and recommend only when the supply of the former fails to be equal to the demand. All the ground cleared after the sowing of sweeds and previous to the 10th of August, I would plow and sow to the common or English turnip, sowing the seed broadcast.

The quantity of land appropriated for soiling will vary according to the extent to which it is desired to pursue the system. One-fourth of an acre to each full grown animal, appropriated in the way indicated, will produce an astonishing amount of the best feed for dairy cows, besides greatly enhancing the amount of valuable manure.—P. Stedman.

WOUNDS IN SHEEP.—Take the leaves of the elder tree and make a strong decoction, and wash the parts affected two or three times a day, and you will not be troubled with flies or worms. It also removes fever from the wound, and is healing.

DIARRHŒ IN CATTLE.—Take half a pint of bran and pour boiling water on it, and cover with a thick cloth until nearly cool; then strain and give the tea to the afflicted animal. Two or three doses are sure to cure—Rural American.

COSTIVENESS IN SHEEP.—Two tablespoonfuls of castor oil every twelve hours. Or give one ounce epsom salts. This may be assisted by an injection of warm water, weak suds and molasses.

RINGBONE.—Mix equal parts of turpentine and lamp oil, and apply to the part affected night and morning, rubbing it well into the hair around the hoof

SCOURS IN HORSES.—Put one pint of good gin, and one ounce of indigo into a bottle; and shake them together and administer in one dose.

SCOURS IN SHEEP.—A pint of new milk, thickened with wheat flour.—To be given twice a day till the discharge is stopped.

ITCH IN SWINE.—Rub the animal with equal parts of lard and brimstone, and put them in a clean pan.
