Agricultural.

Preparing for Winter.

Strawberry beds should now be covered, in most northern localities. It is not always necessary to protect the plants, still there are very few varieties that will not yield enough more to pay for the extra expense and trouble. Grass cut from low grounds is the best for this purpose, as it contains fewer seeds that will be likely to grow on upland. Straw is good if threshed clean; if not the grain will fall out, and be very likely to cause considerable trouble another season. The mulch applied to strawberry plants in the fall should be light, not more than one inch deep, as shade is the main object in covering, so as to prevent the ground freezing and thawing with every change of the weather in winter and early spring.

ASPARAGUS BEDS

may be covered this fall with manure from the barn-yard. Spread it on thick, for there is but little danger of making the ground too rich for this vegetable. Next spring the manure may be removed or forked into the soil; this last plan is the best of the two.

HAULING OUT MANURE.

It is a good plan to haul out the manure in the fall and spread it upon grass lands, or even where it is to be ploughed under in in spring. There is no danger of waste unless the land is so uneven that the manure will be taken off by heavy rains. A top dressing of coarse manure applied to late sown wheat or rye will often double the crop. Those who have these grains on rather poor land should try the top dressing system, even if they cannot afford it on only a few rods square. We are certain that the results will satisfy them that it is highly beneficial.

GATHERING LEAVES.

Millions of tons of leaves are now falling to the ground in this country, and they should not be allowed to go to waste. All through the Eastern States the land getting old and sadly deficient in materials for producing good crops, but how many farmers ever think of saving the leaves from the forests or groves on their farms? There is no better fertilizer known than decomposed leaves. Every gardner is aware of this fact, and carefully saves all that comes within his reach. Next spring the manure heap will be altogether too small to suit most farmers, and now is a good time to increase the size by gathering all the leaves, and composting them with barn-yard manure. Damp, rainy days are the best for gathering leaves, because they hold together better when damp than when dry.

DIGGING TREES.

All hardy trees (except evergreens) that are to be transplanted in the spring, may be taken up now; and all broken roots and the end of those cut off by the spade should be pared smooth, and then heeled-in a dry place, covering the roots a foot or two deep. Trees taken up this fall, and carefully trimmed and heeled-in, will be far more certain to grow next year than if the digging is delayed until spring, for the simple reason that the wounds made on the roots will commence to heal during the winter, and be ready to throw out any feeding roots early in the season. Besides this, spring brings its own work, and we are very likely to delay transplanting trees until too late for safety. It requires time for the wounds on the roots of trees to heal over, and it is better to give plenty when it costs nothing additional.

PLANTING BULBS.

Hardy bulbs, such as hyacinths, tulips, crocus, and lilies should all be in the ground as soon as possible.—They can be planted later in the season, but they will not do as well as when planted early, for if the soil is too cold to allow them to make new roots this fall, they are very likely to be killed by frost before spring.—Early planting is the only safe plan, either for fall or spring.

PLANTING TREE SEEDS.

All kinds of hardy tree seeds should go into the ground while it is in a condition to work easily. Chestnut, oak, hickory, maple, and similar seeds may now be sown.

Pear and apple seeds may also be sown, although some prefer to keep them in sand until spring; but soil and climate differ, and the system followed may be varied to suit each. But let the work be done this fall that can be safely, and therby gain so much on another year.

LARGE AND HEAVY POULTRY.—A foreign exchange records the following figures in representing the respective weights of different birds at a late poultry show in England, which are as follows:—Turkeys—Cock and hen, exceeding one year old, first second, third and fourth prizes respectively, 50 pounds, 46½ pounds, and 42½ pounds; birds of 1867, first prize, 36 pounds, 13 ounces; second, 35 pounds; third, 35 pounds; and fourth, 33½ pounds. Geese—White gander and goose, exceeding one year old, first prize, 54½ pounds; second, 49 pounds; birds of 1867, first prize, 44 pounds; second, 41 pounds; gray and mottled, exceeding one year old, first prize, 54 pounds; second, 41 pounds; birds of 1867, first prize, 45½ pounds; second, 45½ pounds. Ducks—White Aylesburg (drake and duck), first prize, 18½ pounds; second, 17¾ pounds; third, 16½ Rouen, first prize, 19½ pounds; second, 18 pounds; third, 18 pounds; fourth, 16 pounds; fifth, 15½ pounds; sixth, 15½ pounds.

AFTER an experience of 50 years, a writer in N. E. Farmer says that good cows will eat, on an average, 20 lbs. of hays per day when giving milk, 15 lbs. when dry. Not by guesswork, but tested by actual weighing for months at a time.—They will pay well for their keeping by yielding an average of 6 quarts of milk per day throughout the year. He estimates summer pasture at 50 cents per week, and milk at 3½ cents per qaart.

A MEMBER of the Paris Academy of Science tested the laying capacities of ducks and hens—three of each for the term of one year. The three hens produced 247 eggs, and the ducks 517. As ducklings are more easily raised than chickens, and when grown produce more eggs than the latter, and are as valuable when killed for market, the advantage would seem to be in favor of the ducks for profit.

CARROT PUDDING.—Half a pound grated carrot, half a pound grated potato, half a pound suet choped fine, half a pound flour, spices of all sorts, salt, raisins, and citron to taste.—Steam five hours. To be eaten with wine sauce.

Legal.
