Agricultural.

The Care of Harness

Perhaps nothing on a farm better repays the care bestowed on it than harness; few things go so quickly to the bad from neglect.

Now if the bare consideration of economy (for the article in question is costly,) we add a little for appearance-sake in nicely kept harness, something for the comfort of the animals working in well-fitting, flexible leather, and what value you please for the safety to life and limb of the owner and beast, we need not apologize for asking attention to this subject as important.

Harness ought to be washed about once a month with sponge and Castile soap—one strap at a time—and the soap removed by a clear-water sponge as soon as the surface is cleansed.

Twice a year it should be oiled, or oftener if much used and frequently wet and dry. Unless you can obtain perfectly pure neat's foot oil, (such as Peter Cooper's,) make it yourself. Take the feet of beef, crush the bones well with a sledge or axe, and boil them in a large pot of water for 12 hours. Make two quarts of tallow from fried beef or mutton suet, and pour it into a four-quart can (which should have a lid to keep out mice) and place it on the stove. Add a lump of pure yellow wax as large as a hen's egg, stirring as it melts. Then fill up the can with neat's foot oil, and, removing it from the fire, continue to stir until the intermixture is thoroughly complete. This, when cold, will be about the same consistence as hog's lard. Keep in the can a bit of sponge always ready for use. It ought to be when it first goes into the grease, as it will remain more flexible always afterwards than greased when dry.

Leather which has become dry and horny through long neglect, will receive no benefit from grease applied to it in its dry and hard condition. You must only have grease of the right sort, but must know how to use it. First, then, take the harness apart wherever it can be unbuckled. If hard, soak it in clear water (not warmer than milk freshly drawn) for several hours. Then wash the piece as directed with Castile soap, and work them in the hands until they are soft and pliant; and if in very bad condition, this will require care and patience. Hang in a room where they will not dry too rapidly. When about half dry, apply the grease liberally on both sides, and again hang it up, for at least one day if possible.

A white crust like stearine will be left on the surface when the leather is dry, which can be removed with a dry coarse cloth. For common work harness nothing more will be needed, but carriage harness may be again washed with a sponge, and wiped with a dry chamois skin.

Boots and shoes, of cow hide, kip or calf-skin, ought to be treated in the same way several times a year. If the surface is washed with Castile soap, they will take a superior polish after the second brushing. Try the comfort of such boots, and I shall then be able to appeal to your understandings. O farmers, as well as your interest, when I urge you not to neglect "The Care of Harness."—Country Gentleman.

EXHAUSTION OF LAND BY DAIRY FARMING.—It has been suggested to us that cheese factories would be found to be unprofitable institutions in the end; that by increasing the area devoted to dairy pasturage, and thus decreasing the number of hogs, calves, and other stock raised in the regions where the factories are located, they will cause exhaustion of the soil, as the milk is all taken from the farm without return being made. The danger of such a result we think small. The process of exhaustion would certainly be slower than where hay or grain are largely sold. On many dairy farms grain and hay are purchased each year, and fed to the cows in addition to that raised on the farms.

There is one waste, comparatively small, which might be avoided. In many cases where cheese is made at factories the whey is lost to the farmers. We see no good reason why it should not be taken back and fed to hogs on the farm. We think it could be fed more profitably than is ordinarily the case at factories.

We also believe it would be better for dairymen to raise their cows rather than buy them; better cows could thus be secured, and ordinarily at less rates.

With a careful application of the large quantities of manure made on dairy farms, and the additional precautions of feeding whey to them, and raising calves insted of buying cows, we should expect such farms to improve in condition and fertility, rather than to see them retrograde.—Western Rural.

FALL PLANTING OF ASPARAGUS.—Within the past two years we have watched experiments made by several gentlemen in planting asparagus in August, and the result is a remarkable success. The ground is prepared as for the crop at any other season, and, after cutting off the green tops of the young seedlings, the roots are set precisely as in spring planting. They push new roots at once, and make eyes so strong that even from one year-old seedlings some asparagus—but not, of course, very strong—has been cut the following spring; and when two-year roots have been used a full crop has been cut at the same time—a result no one expects from spring planting. In this region the plan has taken strong hold of gardeners, and asparagus planting is likely to take rank at once with strawberry as a regular August operation. It will, of course, be best in such cases to cover the beds, after they have once become frozen, with some kind of litter; not to keep out frost, but to prevent thawing and freezing until the natural spring season comes, or the plants may be thrown out.—Gardener's Monthly.

COW LEAKING HER MILK.—A subscriber asks:

"What will prevent a cow from leaking her milk?"

We have seen it prevented by placing an India rubber ring around the teat after milking. Another remedy common with some dairymen is to milk such cows three times a day until the muscles of the teats gain sufficient strength to hold the milk from morning until evening. Another successful and simple way is to apply a quantity of collodion to the end of the teat immediately after milking. This forms at once a thin, tough membrane or skin which will prevent leakage, and is easily removed before milking. It may be had at the druggists.

We recommend a medal."

6. Thou shalt not commit an impropriety—of buying of Chatham-st. Dealers, but come directly to Rosenberg & Wolff's (One Price Regulator, Main street.

7. Thou shalt not seek in vain for goods of Foreign make, for Rosenberg & Wolff keep a large variety.

8. Thou shalt not purloin from the Regulator for Rosenberg & Wolff sell so cheap it would be a sin.

9. Thou shalt not bear false witness, but honestly acknowledge that you can get better suited and for less money, at Rosenberg and Wolff's, than any other store.

10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods, or his bargains, for Rosenberg & Wolff can give them to you likewise; therefore, take counsel, and buy only of Rosenberg & Wolff, the One Price Men.
