Agricultural.

ODE TO HORTICULTURE.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

This day, two hundred years ago,
The wild grapes by the river's side,
And tasteless ground-nut, trailing low,
The table of the woods supplied.

Unknown the apple's red and gold,
The blushing tint of peach and pear;
The mirror of the pow wow told
No tale of orchards ripe and rare.

Wild as the fruits he scorned to till,
These vales an idle Indian trod;
Nor knew the glad, creative skill,
The joy of him who toils with God.

O, Painter of the fruits and flowers!
We thank Thee for Thy wise design,
Whereby these human hands of ours
In nature's garden work with Thine.

And thanks that from our daily need
The joy of simple faith is born,
That he who smiles the summer weed
May Trust Thee for the autumn corn.

Give fools their gold and knaves their power,
Let fortunes bubbles rise and fall;
Who sows a field or trains a flower,
Or plants a tree, is more than all.

For he who blesses most is blest;
And God and shall own his worth
Who toils to leave as a bequest
And added beauty to the earth.

And, soon or late, to all that sow,
The time of harvest shall be given;
The flowers shall bloom, the fruit shall grow,
If not on earth, at least in heaven.

Soiling instead of Pasturing.

We hold it to be indispensable, that farmers in the Atlantic States, where and labor are high and produce on the whole cheap, must avail themselves of some more profitable management of their lands than heretofore. If they do not, it may be better (if money making from their business is the object,) to emigrate to where lands are cheaper and markets in manufacturing or mining districts equally good as New York or Philadelphia.

There are, however, various reasons oftentimes, why a persons should not leave the paternal acres, and if it can be shown that he can double his profits by a new and better system, it is often greatly preferable for himself and family to remain surrounded by domestic, social and religious associations and privileges, than to enter upon the untried hardships of a new settlement.

Our heading shows how this may be done. In the great dairy section of this State, within 40 miles of Philadelphia, and where there is access by rail, milk or butter or cheese are relied on for the chief profits of the farm. Now if, independent of other products, where 20 cows are usually kept in the ordinary way, and by soiling 40 cows can be better kept on the same land, and yield proportionally more milk and butter, the problem would soon be solved. Can this be done? All fair experience says it can, and many who have tried it here and in England say that three times the number of cows can be equally well kept on the same land. Quincy on Soiling says:

"There is no proposition in nature more true, than that any farmer may maintain, upon thirty acres of good arable land, twenty head of cattle, in better condition condition, with more profit, with more comfort to the animals, with less labor, and less cash advance, to himself; than he at present usually expends upon a hundred acres. In addition to which, he will have the great satisfaction of seeing, in time, every square inch of his land productive; instead of seeing as he does now, not more than one part in four of his farm producing anything; or, at least, anything that will pay the expense of harvesting,

Soiling cows, instead of pasturing them, both makes and saves. It saves inside fences, which in this vicinity it appears by a recent statement in the Practical Farmer, costs to keep up, $48 per acre. It saves land—it saves manure. It increases the production of milk and butter, taking a period of 8 or 9 months; although when grass is fresh in early spring there is an increase of milk, which cows give over that of being confined in the yard; yet when the weather gets warmer and flies abound, with pasture getting a little scarce, the amount given in the yard or stable, where there is shade, shade, shelter and water, soon exceeds the other. The question, are cows as healthy in confined yards as on the pasturage system, can be fully answered in the affirmative. We think a small yard, supplied with shedding of trees for shade and protection is preferable to being tied in the stable. In this yard they can walk a little about, or rub themselves against a post. It will be observed, cows in a field when eating are mostly standing still, and the exercise they do take of their own accord is to hunt food, or to protect themselves from the weather.

How to keep up a supply of green food would seem to be, in this country, the great point on which the adoption of the soiling system may turn—but we think here there is no difficulty.

Fall sown rye, sown probably twice as thick as ordinary and in rich ground, will give a supply of green food early in spring, till orchard grass and clover, mixed, are ready for mowing. Oats should also be sown, four bushels to the acre, as early as the ground will admit, to come in after the first cutting of grass, and before the sown corn. The latter will be found to be the great staple crop of the soiling system. The first sowing in drills, 3 feet apart, and at the rate of three bushels to the acre, should be on or before the first week of the 5th month (May), and successive sowings should be made ten days or two weeks apart. Sown Indian corn is a wonderful provision of nature as food for stock. An immense weight of it can be grown on an acre; it is eaten greedily and is most nutritious, promoting the secretion of milk more than any other kind of food. It abounds in rich saccharine matter. We have seen beautiful sugar made from stalks of Indian corn. Any excess of it, not consumed by the cows green, can be cured for winter provender, and is better than any kind of hay. The cultivation of roots—sugar beets and ruta bagas—should also enter into the soiling system. Independent of their merits as a green succulent food in winter season, the leaves and tops make in the fall a pleasant change from other food.—Practical Farmer.

STEAMED FOWLS.—Fowls are better steamed than boiled, especially when there is no veal steak on hand to boil them in. When steamed, the juices should be saved by placing a pan under the strainer to catch all the drips. Drawn butter, plain or seasoned with parsley or celery, is the most common sauce used for boiled fowls. Liver sauce is good; but when oyster sauce can be had, it is to be preferred above all others.

CONSUMERS OF

CONFECTIONERY!

COME,

LET US REASON TOGETHER!

How can any person manufacture Confectionery, and sell it at 15 cents a pound, when sugar is worth 16 cents at the Refinery, (unless it is terribly adulterated?

How can any dealer retail such a vile compound to his customers and have a conscience void of offence?

How can any consumer expect to purchase pure Confectionery, at twenty-five and thirty cents per pound when a pure article cannot be manufactured less than thirty to forty cents per pound, consisting of cassia buds, burnt almonds, and such class of goods?

Within a few days we have been offered cassia buds, etc., for fifteen cents per pound, and Chocolate Creams at twenty cents, and the agent acknowledged that they were adulterated ten per cent, with Terra Alba; and it is fact that tons of this cheap Confectionery are made and sold in this country every year, and the consumers are the only persons injured by it.

Now, for the benefit of those who wish a Pure article of Confectionery, we will warrant every article of our manufacture Strictly Pure and free from every ingredient deleterious to health.
