Agricultural.

The Cause of Rust in Wheat.

A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph writes to that paper on this topic in this wise:

I have before me an article in last week's paper, stating that it is getting to be the pretty general opinion among farmers that the sowing of grass seed, clover or timothy, in the fall with wheat, is the cause of rust in the same, etc.

I beg leave to differ from that article; first, clover is generally sown in the spring in this region of the country at least—the winter would probably destroy it; but timothy is usually sown with the wheat, or close following it. If any person wishes to raise a crop of wheat and rust, I will give him a receipt how to do so. Sow your wheat very late in the fall in order to not get much root, so that the frosts of winter may raise much of it out of the ground and cause it to perish; it will then start in the spring thin, grow rank, with a very dark color, and ripen very late. You may then expect a good crop of rust. Yet if it is sown in good season, ground good, plenty of seed, timothy moderate, you may expect as bright straw as any of your neighbors, although they may have sown grass seed or not. Damp or rainy weather is favorable to smut; but that will come if it choose, grass or not. If the wheat is sown early, the timothy need not be so thick as was formerly the custom when sown later; the reason is, it will supply itself with a stronger root. But the grass seed is of high importance, as the wheat crop will barely pay at the present prices of grain, labor machinery, fertilizers, etc.

It is also claimed that grass seed, sown after harvesting the wheat, will produce as good crops the following year as it would if sown with the wheat. Here I differ again, very much as to the timothy, and clover also, if it is sown after the wheat harvest; for we well know that we are very liable to have much dry weather after harvest, that would be much against its taking root; we also know that many weeds and much fall grass, as it is usually termed, would be striving for the mastery, and to smother it out, so that in the following fall or spring, we would have to put on our "specs" perhaps, to find it; and to have a good crop the following season, the chance, I think, would be slim. With even a wet autumn, the fall grasses and other intruders would even more quickly, perhaps, choke the newly-sown grasses.

Green Grass Makes the Best Hay.

There is probably no part of the farmer's labor that requires the exercise of greater judgment than this, since upon its successful accomplishment depends the condition and welfare of the stock. There is no one but has noticed with what avidity the herd will devour the richly perfumed, well cured hay, and with what a disrelish they attempt to sustain life perhaps by eating musty, unsavory fodder. Now is it not a question whether hay can be cut too early from this fact, that it is generally considered that the aftermath or rowen is the best hay that can be given to milk cows, increasing the flow of milk considerably more than old hay from more mature grass. It is said that some portions of Switzerland where the fields are irrigated, as many as six or seven tons of hay are cut from an acre, by cutting as early times, which is as soon as the grass has a fair growth, and long before it even arrives at the period of blossoming. One thing is certain, that cattle, when left to roam the pastures and select their own food, instead of selecting the more mature portion as their free choice, invariably choose the younger and more succulent, so that, in time the pasture presents the singular appearance of being covered in parts with matured hay, and in others closely grazed; nor is this peculiar to cattle alone, since the same taste prevades the horse and sheep kind. So, then, the desire of animals so far as it can be expressed, seems to favor a young growth. Another fact, too, is frequently noticed, in the falling off in flesh, in the change from pasture to the stable and vice versa, and again in the fall fattening of stock by pasture alone, which the most successful farmer would little think of doing by feeding of hay. Now all of this would seem to point to the necessity almost, to say nothing of the advantage, of cutting hay while young and tender. If any have doubts let them place a quantity of both kinds before their animals, and they will soon find that the youngest cut hay, if properly cured, will be the first to disappear.—W. H. P., in N. E. Farmer.

LUNAR INFLUENCE ON VEGETATION.—According to a North Carolina correspondent, the influence of the moon on vegetation may be determined by trying the following experiment:

Take any given quantity of common peas, and divide the same into four parts, keeping them separate. Then, on any ground at all fit for vegetation, when the season approaches, sow the contents of the first parcel on the first or second day of the new moon; the second parcel sow near the same spot on the first or second day of the second quarter; the third parcel sow on the second or third day before the full moon; and lastly, sow the fourth parcel on the second or third day before the moon is out. Now the first parcel, sown under the new moon, will grow very fast, blossom most beautifully, but will not bear much fruit, the second will blossom and bear very little; the third parcel will not only blossom beautifully, but will bear fruit in abundance; and the fourth and last parcel will scarcely rise from the ground. Likewise all fruit trees set at the new moon blossom, but three days before the full moon, bear abundantly. In pruning trees, the same effect takes place, for a tree pruned at the new moon will shoot forth branches, but will prove unproductive, but if pruned at the full, it will bear abundantly.

The Maine Farmer predicts a wet season this year. "We look for a wet season the coming spring and summer. One extreme of atmospheric condition in the passing years usually succeeds another. We have during the winter of 1870-71, experienced an unusual drouth—the approaching season we shall in all probability have a far greater amount of rain fall than in the past growing season."

Secondly,

WHERE THEY ARE SOLD CHEAP

RAWSON

Mowing Machine.

HARVEST OF 1871.

A NEW INVENTION.

PATENTED NOVEMBER 29, 1870.

And applied to every Machine; is so contracted that you do not have to use the lever in turning either way. It will run on any line just as easy as on a straight line, taking all the side pressure from the horses. It has a full joint and will describe a full circle either way, saving half the labor for the horses and driver. The upper frame is so jointed or attached to the lower frame, as to form a lifting lever taking a large part of the weight of the bar from the ground and placing it back upon the driving wheels, and lessening the draft of the machine, making one of the lightest draft machines in use.

The machine has been greatly improved and is manufactured by using wrought iron and steel in the place of cast iron. The Castor Wheel is upon a steel spring with wrought iron holders, making it light and strong. We can say to farmers that they can depend upon having a machine that has no equal. It has cast steel shafts, and both shoes plated with cast steel. Machines are warranted in every particular. If any part breaks from defects in material or workmanship new parts will be sent without extra charge.

The Finger Bar is carried at both ends of wheels; can change the wheels so as to cut three heights of stubble. The machine has a flexible finger bar, and will conform to the inequalities of the ground over which it is drawn, doing as good work upon uneven ground as upon even ground.

THE REAR BAR MACHINE

Has a double folding Finger Bar, having a longitudinal, oscillating motion. This machine has wheels at both ends of the finger bar, and is so arranged that you can set them to cut any height, and can back out without raising the lever.

PHILADELPHIA OPTICAL INSTITUTE,

For the manufacturing of the

CONCAVE CONVEX, CRYSTAL LENSES, LONDON SMOKED AND TINTED GLASS FOR WEAK OR INFLAMED EYES.

The Concave Convex Crystal Spectacles, made by the above institute are now a long time before the public, and the rapid and increased demand for them combined with the universal acknowledgment of their clearness in vision and ease to the eye, shows plainly that they are superior to any other glasses in the market.

The majority of Spectacles, (mostly imported) and no matter how fine the frames, contain but a poor and worthless article of glasses, (generally cast or pressed) they are made to be sold only, without any calculation respecting benefit to the eye, and therefore the great complaint of poor and weak sight. Thousands are using glasses now which tire and fatigue the eye, where the objects get dim after short usage, or require an intensely strong light and therefore destroying the sight, which, were they properly suited, would be preserved a life time.

The advantages claimed for the Concave Convex Crystal Glasses are the following:

The Lenses are ground of the best material, pure and hard, and made only for optical purposes, they are therefore not liable to get scratched or dim.

They confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision not found in any other glass.

They can be used equally well by day or candle light without tiring or fatiguing the eye.

They are ground mathematically true in the concave convex mirror, according to the philosophy of nature, and shape of cornea of the eye, therefore assisting nature only instead of forcing it.

That the lenses are centered correctly to the frames.

They can be used longer than any other glasses without changing to a higher power.

The frames are made strong and durable by experienced workmen and warranted to give satisfaction.
