Warm Feet.

And How to Keep Them So.

A correspondent of the American Agriculturist furnishes that paper with the following remarks on warm feet, which remarks are admirably calculated for our latitude:

To go with cold feet is to undermine the constitution, and this half the women and the girls are doing. They have the habit of cold feet, and the accompanying habit of ill health; think home-knit woolen stockings are not very fashionable. Once no country girl was reckoned fit to be married until she had knit her pillow-case full of stockings, but it is not so now. I do not regret that less hand-knitting is done that formely, but I hope we shall not give up warm woolen stockings for winter us until we can replace them with something better. Merino or the common "boughten" while woolen stockings are rather thin, but some of us supplement them with an additional pair of cotton stockings, wearing the cotton woolen pair next the feet, as individuals prefer. Cold feet are often caused, at least in part, by too tight elastics or bands at the tops of the stockings, or by tight shoes, or shoes tight in the ankles. These interfere with the circulation of the blood, and there cannot be a comfortable degree of warmth without a good circulation and aeration of the blood. My last lesson in this matter came from a baby's experience last September. Suddenly she contracted a habit of having cold feet, and when I warmed them the skin seemed hard and inactive, suggesting the need of a bath, when a bath did not seem necessary except for the feet. At length it occurred to me that her "ankle-ties" had been too loose, and just before we came home from our visit a young lady cousin had set the bottons back further, to make the little slipper stay on better. Ever since that change the slipper straps had been tight around her ankles, especially after I put on woolen stockings. I changed the buttons again, and her feet no longer got cold, except in consequence of the actual rigors of the climate. Some well-informed persons object to Congress gaiters, the elastics are usually so firm and close about the ankle. Only very loose gaiters are allowable and these may not be necessary when the stockings are worn over under-drawrs. Garters in the straps buttoning to both waist and stockings are most sensible for women as well as for children.

GOOD AND BAD FARMING.—A workman is known by his chips, and the evidences of good or bad farming may be found in the general thriff, or its lack on the farm.

It is not an evidence of good farming to see dilapidated fences broken bars, gates swinging on one hinge, or perhaps not swinging at all. It is not an evidence of good farming to find the plow frozen in the furrow, the barrow, just where it was last used, the harvester sheltered in an angle of the Virginia fence, the mower standing in the middle of the meadow, where the late swath was finished. It was not an evidence of good farming to find minor tools lying around loose to be covered by the snows of winter, the corn crib uncovered and exposed to the sun and rain, nor a few logs dozed by the weather, to be worked up piecemeal, as wanted, or perhaps, if coal is used, lying in a scattered pile, with no covering save the canopy of heaven. It is not suggestive of thriff when hogs are allowed to root up the meadows that perhaps must be cut for hay next season, or horses and cattle allowed to roam there at will, long after the last grass is devoured, eating into the roots and perhaps poaching the turf soaked with rain. It is not good economy to allow stock in Winter to go unprovided with comfortable stables or sheds, because you cannot afford to buy the lumber to shelter them with. These are some of the principal evidences of bad farming. The minors are many, for that which is worth buying is worth preserving, and he who is the best farmer makes the most money in the end. The way to accomplish this is to begin young, for habits or orderly care acquired then will be improved in mature age just as carelessness will be intensified with the growth of years.

The farmer who owns but little stock and keeps it fat, is richer than he who, owning much, allows it to waste and become poor in the endeavor to keep more than his farm can carry. Much of the thrift and order about the farm lies with the children. However much the parents may strive, however hard they may labor, if the children are not interested in preserving order, if they have not constantly before them incentives to do so, one little dereliction will follow nother, until in the end disorder will prevail, the farm will begin to run down, and it will be found that it costs more to bring it back twice to what it would have to have kept it in tact at first. Whenever you are through with a tool or implement for the season, put it away in a secure place. The objection sometimes made that it takes so much room for storage, is not valid. There is, on every farm, plenty of loft room for the lighter tools, and many ways will suggest: themselves for raising comparatively heavy ones, as plows and harrows, and a little time spent at the right time will be money in the end. Even mowers, harvesters, and threshing machines, occupy but little room. if properly taken apart, and the exercise of doing so and putting them together again, often gives valuable lessons in mechanics, and renders the operator thoroughly conversant with the workings of the machine itself. There is more in the care of little things than most people imagine, for if these are thoroughly looked after greater ones are not apt to suffer.—Western Rural.

SALT AND WHEAT.—Every day strengthens the impression of the efficiency of salt and wheat, though we have received some conflicting testimony. One of our Iowa correspondents writes that he applied salt at the rate of one bushel per acre to wheat of land bottom, rather sandy, with rich swales. Just before harvest the unsalted portions of the field were still quite green, while the salted were ready to cut; before fully ripe, the unsalted crinked down and was comparatively poor, while the salted stood up well and the straw was remarkable fine. On the other hand, another correspondent from the same state says he applied one peck of salt to a quarter of an acre of a field of wheat of rich bottom land; with him the salted portion outgrew the other, being eight or ten inches taller, but fell down before harvest, and did not fill so well as the other. The conclusion he draws is that the salt was too stimulating in its effects; strengthened the straw, preserving it healthy, whereby the grain is nourished. We saw a week or two ago a sample of wheat to which salt had been applied, and were struck with the beauty of the straw and the plumpless of the berry. We should earnestly advise our readers to apply salt to their next sowing—not less than one bushel per acre—the cost of which will be about fifty cents per acre; and if we attend to our interests, we will lessen this cost considerably. On sandy lands particulary to this subject, which promises to be of great benefit to wheat producers and consumers. The experience of Jonas Berger, given last winter in this paper, having let to a general desire to try the exseriment.—Rock River Farmer.

"ONE THING AT A TIME'

The National Live Stock Journal notes that the history of stock husbandry in Europe and in this country satisfactorily proves that few men succeed in any marked degree as breeders of more than one race of domestic animals, or of more than one variety of a single race. A Farmer well situated to do so may attain a certain measure of success in raising and selling horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry—his operations with each may be profitable—but we believe there are not many instances on record were remarkable eminences as a breeder has been attained by one individual with more than one class of stock. The maxims and arguments in favor of a mixed system of husbandry in this country have little force when applied to live stock husbandry alone. The practice of mixed husbandry so often advised consists simply in growing some grain, some vegetables, some fruits, some grasses, and some stock—the proportions and varieties of each to be determined from year to year by the surrounding circumstances and the prospective markets. For the general farmer this is unquestionably the safest and best, but it is not the system which gave celebrity or fortune to the Bakewells, the Collings, the Bates, the Booths, the Hammonds, and others now living, "One thing at a time as a leading specialty, and that alway," seems to be a good law for the breeder who seeks distinction.

WE CLAIM FOR

LAZARUS & MORRIS'

CELEBRATED

PERFECTED SPECTACLES

AND EYE GLASSES,

The undermentioned advantages over those in ordinary use, the proof of which may be seen in the extraordinary sales and constantly increasing demand for them:

1st. That from the peculiar construction of the glasses they assist and preserve the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary.

2d. That they confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision, with an amount of ease and comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle wearers.

3d. That the material from which the Lenses are ground, is manufactured specially for optic purposes, and is pure, hard, and brilliant, and not liable to become scratched.

4th. That the frame in which they are set, whether in Gold, Silver, or
