Agricultural.

Manuring Corn in the Hill.

The question how to retain the fertility of the soil, and make our crops pay best, is one of the most important that could be presented. The past issue has been, what crop would pay best without any reference to retaining the fertility of the soil? But we are learning of late that the most profitable crops are not, in all cases, those that will bring the most money, and return nothing to the soil that produced them.

The question, will it pay to manure corn in the hill with barn-yard manure at the rate of from eight to ten loads per acre, depends very much upon the amount of manure at hand, and the labor to apply it with. That manure may be applied to other crops with less labor, we all admit, but will it serve the object in question? We claim it will.

The wheat crop is one in our experience that is suffering most from exhaustion of soil, both in quality and quantity. As you say, the farmer seeks the most profitable returns from the manure, and we admit he will best secure this end with manuring in the hill, the question arises, shall we divide the manure among the several crops, leaving none for the grass, or shall we apply it to all the crops to be followed by grass? The wheat crop, in our experience, is the most important and remuneration where properly cultivated and manured, and is also a good crop to seed with.

In order more fully to apply our ideas of the importance of the grass crop, we quote the German adage: "No grass, no stock; no manure; no crops." Then in order to secure a good "catch" of grass, it is apparent that we should apply our fertilizers to that crop with which we expect to seed. Our experience in manuring in the hill is, that it produces a very luxuriant growth of stalks, does not car in proportion I have not had experience in foriegn fertilizers, but should think them, if what they are represented to be, worthy of trial We never use any compost of barn-yard manure for corn, for the reason that we hardly obtain enough to secure the wheat and grass crops. We use a compound of equal quantity of wood ashes, plaster, and air-slaked lime, costing from eight to ten dollars per ton, at the rate of five bushels per acre, applied to the hill immediately after planting. This gives it a good start, and this is the main point to success. A three year old clover and timothy sod, full of fertilizing elements, from decay or running out the grasses, which always comes in order under the proper rotation, is the field predestined for corn.—Cor. of Rural Home.

Manuring with Bones.—Mr. Clark writing to the Germantown Telegraph says: My idea was that one great cause why we could not get as good crops from old fields as when they were first cultivated, was owing in a great part to the density of the soil. I had observed that the first eight or ten years after clearing off the forest the land would give good crops with scarcely any care in plowing; the reason of this, I argued, was the decay and rotting of innumerable rootlets of the trees cut down. In order to test this theory I cut about two cords of white-brush, hard-back and other small brushes, and let them lie on a pile exposed to the weather a year and then applied barn yard manure to another half acre adjoinig. The result proved the manure to be a little the best the first year for corn. Sowed grass seed the fall after harvesting the corn. The manured land did pretty well for about five years, the brush place did well for about ten years, proving the theory to be correct. I used two tons of manure as a balance for the two cords of bushes; the plowing was six or eight inches deep. I have repeated the experiment since, with the same result.

Geese.—Where the farm homestead is adapted for geese, where there is proper restraint on the same, there is nothing pays better for keeping on the farm than a gander and three geese. Some have as many as four or five geese with one gander, and the feathers from the young ones when killed are valuable without carefully picking live ones. When there is a comfortable coop, with choice of nests and there is nothing to disturb them, geese will generally raise ten goslings each on an average; but if brought to a fresh place in the spring, or gander or geese are changed, they seldom do well the first season. They are very long-lived and will last any farmer's time on a farm. Some people are ignorant of the habits of demesticated geese and suppose they will only breed in pairs; others think the picking alive to be very economical, whereas the poor, miserable wretches never do much else but supply a few feathers while those who have fine heavy breeds and manage them so as to sell the young ones fat at the right season make a handsome income without stripping them while living.—Rural New Yorker.

Hard and Soft Water.—Hard water has sometimes been thought unhealthy, and people have taken great pains to build cisterns in their houses where rain water purified might be had for the tables. But nature rarely makes mistakes, and spring water is almost uniformly hard. It is found, on extensive and careful inquiry, that hard water is more healthful than soft. The body needs some of the salts held in solution in hard water, and suffers if they are not supplied in some way. In England, the counties where hard water abounds are more healthy than those where soft water is used. The same fact appears in cities, where the mortality is least in the sections supplied with hard water. Contrary to the general impression, soft water acts on leaden pipes more powerfully than hard, and induce danger. Those who have built rain water cisterns, thinking then more healthful than wells, will need to study the wisest methods of nature.

A Virginia correspondent of the Rural New Yorker sums up an article on orchard grass as follows:

"For pasture it has no equal; for hay in quality, it cannot be excelled; and for seed, no other grass is half as profitable as orchard grass. Do not be disappointed with it the first year. Like many of our best grasses, it takes two or three years to come to perfection."

"Where shall I put this paper so as to be sure to find it to-morrow?" inquired Carrie of her brother Charles. "Why on the long looking glass of course," was her brother's reply.

SUSQUEHANNA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

The Spring term of this institution will commence MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1874.

No pains will be spared to maintain the high standing of the institution, and by carefully looking to the interests of each individual student to make its work even more efficient. To save expense, text books, the same as in the county will be used in the English branches, with the exception of Geography.

To make the sojourn of non-resident students more pleasant, the Principal will use his house—situated but a few rods from the Institute building—for boarding purposes, where rooms furnished throughout and provided with clothes closets and other conveniences will be furnished for the young ladies.

The best rooms in the Institute will be furnished and assigned to the young men; all will board at the house of the Principal. There will be a careful supervision on the part of the Principal and teachers of the manner in which students employ their time.

APPLETONS' AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

NEW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA, was completed in 1863, since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the signal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, literature and art, have induced the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge, has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared, has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time, have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible date, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added, not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater lucidity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of scenery, architecture and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to Subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous colored Lithographic Maps.

and it may be set down as certain that, in the House at least, the bill repealing the local-option law is certain of passage. What influence have worked this extraordinary metamorphosis of opinion, we don't pretend to say. Madame Rumor insists that the liquor league, taking advantage of the hungry condition of members, whose pickings and perquisites have been exceedingly meagre this session, has touched the sacceptible ones with the golden wand of Midas, and caused them to view the subject in an entirely different light than at the beginning. Be this as it may, it is certainly significant that not even the overpowering presence of the "praying women" of Pittsburg, reinforced by their sisters of this city, could prevent the passage on first reading of the bill empting brewers and manufacturers from the effect of the local-option law. It is understood that this action was only for the purpose of testing the temper of the House, and that its further progress will not be insisted upon. This view is sustained by the fact that the repeal bill, which has slumbered in committee for three months, was yesterday reported affirmatively. Of course, the fight will be prolonged and bitter in the extreme, and will in itself add two weeks at least to the length of the session. The bill in question will [illegible] and kept constantly on hand ready for use.
