Thus has fallen, in the prime of life, one of the best and most respected citizens of Manor township. The Angel of Death descends and cuts the purest link, and softly bears it to a home invisible. The tear of agony must flow, and grief wrung hearts must ache; but tears that fall from many eyes weeping together lose their bitterness, and heavy hearts that lean on one another find their load of pain and sorrow lightened, in the well-grounded hope that their departed friend now lives in a brighter and better home beyond the skies. BILL BLOWER.
[AN EPIGRAM.]
BY THE BARD OF TOWER HALL.

Bill Blower, by a land-shark trapped
When overcome with grog,
Was forced to seek a lawyer's aid
To "overhaul his log."

The lawyer, wishing Bill to "bloed,"
Put on a solemn face,
And talked about the "Bill of rights,"
As bearing on the case.

"Hold, shipmate," cried the honest tar,
"Avast there, if you will!
I care not for the 'Bill of rights,'
But for the rights of Bill."

NOTE—
Poor Bill was right: he claimed his rights,
And so should people all!
He's in the right, who rightly buys
His clothes at TOWER HALL.

Messrs. BENNETT & Co. have a Mammoth Establishment with every facility for manufacturing Clothing in the most substantial and economical manner. They always buy for cash directly from the manufactures, and pay no Jobber's profits. Every garment which they offer for sale has been carefully examined by competent parties, and no Clothing goes into the Salesrooms which is not right in every respect. They are well known throughout the Union; and their sales are immense. They believe that pennies from millions are better than dollars from hundreds, and, for this reason, act upon the motto:
"Quick sales and small profits."
They sell Clothing to suit all classes at a very small advance on the cost prices; and the fact is daily demonstrated to a host of patrons.
