Agricultural.

BEE-KEEPING BY FARMERS.—There are two reasons why farmers should keep bees; first, because their occupancy of land places them in the right localities to improve the whole honey field; and second, because their occupancy of the field entitles them to its harvests. Can it be made profitable? It would hardly be profitable to make it a principal business; as an incidental business, it may afford them a large return for a very moderate outlay and trifling expense. Four hives of sufficient size, with surplus honey receptacles for 400 pounds of honey, will cost say twenty-five dollars; four swarms of bees would, at five dollars each, cost twenty dollars—making an outlay of $45. The first year they would give, in a good field and season, 128 pounds of surplus, more or less, according to the season, amounting at thirty cents per pound, to $38.40. The second season would yield 500 pounds, or $150 amounting in the two seasons to $188.40. This gives more than four times the cost in two seasons; and the average for many seasons may equal this, with no additional expense save the supply of new honey boxes annually. I gave the above figures from the results of actual experiment, having received the average given above from four hives the first and second seasons, they being the first two seasons in which I placed swarms in the Eureka hives, and the honey was so white and fine that it brought me thirty cents per pound.

Let me advise my farmer friends how to proceed in this matter. Get from one to four hives; according to your honey field and faith; take them to a bee keeper, who will place a good first swarm in each hive; and remove them home. Or if the seller is pleased to let them stand till fall, place boxes on them and let them stand till there. At the proper time in the fall, remove the boxes, and take all home. With hives so constructed as to prevent the disposition to swarm, and the number limited to the capacity of the field, I have no doubt they would sometimes do better than this, as I have had 200 pounds from one hive in one season. On this plan, there is little to do but to place and remove the boxes in the proper time. If the hive is so constructed as to give ample room in the breeding and wintering apartment, lending is rendered unnecessary. If proper means are used to give room in the surplus boxes for all the colony the whole season, before any preparation is made for swarming and the hives are effectually shaded from the sun, no watching for swarms will be required; and no time necessarily devoted to them but to put on the surplus boxes in season, and remove them when full; and this may even be done by a neighbor accustomed to the business, if one is apprehensive of danger in performing these, or any other operations above the hive.

WHERE SHALL WE PUT OUR MANURE?—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says:

It has long been the custom of our farmers to apply their barnyard manure to the oat stubble and plow it under for wheat, and a majority of them still carry the plan out. Is it the best one? Its disadvantages are two-fold; the work comes during the warmest season of the year, just before plowing, when our teams need all their strength and endurance—in fact no more unfavorable time, so far as the teams are concerned, could be selected—and the manure must be kept in the yard from the time the stock are turned out in May, until the oats crop is harvested, and even in the best arranged yards it loses some of its value during this time. If there is a loss in a well arranged yard, how much greater is it in three-fourths of the yards, in which very little care is to guard against waste?

Would it not be better to apply it to the sod before turning it under for corn? The advantages of this plan are—the hauling can be done during the open weather of winter or early spring, when the teams are comparatively idle, and the farm hands have most leisure time. There will be no loss from remaining in the yard during the summer, and the crop of corn, which is one of the grossest feeders, is materially increasid. Another advantage on strong land is, that we shall avoid in great measures our annual loss of grain from the wheat going down (lodging) before it is properly fil[illegible]. One objection urged against this plan is that the crop of oats which succeeds the corn will "go down" and be comparatively worthless. I avoid this trouble by substituting Hungarian grass for oats, and at the usual market price of hay, can raise enough to buy the oats and have some value left. A far more serious objection is, that on land only moderately productive the wheat will need some kind of stimulant. This may readily be put on in the form of some good commercial fertilizer, which will be doubly paid for by the increase of the corn and grass crops.

ROTATION OF CROPS.—Is our present rotation of corn, oats, wheat and grass the best one we can adopt? In English parlance it involves a succession of three "white crops" (grain crops), which is there considered very bad management. As a substitute I have several times adopted the following: Corn (with barnyard manure), Hungarian grass and wheat with grass seed. I would like to work a crop of clover in between the Hungarian grass and wheat so that the first crop might be mowed and the aftermath turned under for wheat, but all my experiments thus far seem to demonstrate the idea that a good crop of Hungarian grass forms so thick a growth that it effectually smothers the clover out. A friend recommends me to grow clover in the corn either just before or soon after the last working and mow the first crop for hay, turning the aftermath down either for wheat or Hungarian grass; I have tried this but never succeeded in getting the clover to take well. Our English brethren bridge over the difficulty of a succession of grain crops by an intermediate crop of roots; our climate will not allow this and our corn crop is too serious a competitor for roots to contend with. I find nothing better than corn well manured, Hungarian grass, wheat, clover, and timothy.

CELERY.—As soon as the nights begin to be cool, commence to earth up; this should be done only when the plant is dry, for if the leaves are wet the probability is that the stalks will rust. Take care in earthing up, not to allow any particles of earth to enter the centre of the plants.

APPLETONS' AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

NEW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA, was completed in 1863, since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the signal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, literature and art, have induced the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPÆDIA.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge, has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared, has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time, have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added, not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater lucidity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of scenery, architecture and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to Subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous colored Lithographic Maps.
