Agricultural.

THE BACK SIDES OF HOUSES.—Take the prettiest and best kept village of New England, and we doubt if a tenth part of even the most pretentious mansions and the most ornate cottage will bear examination in the rear. Instead of being nicely finished in all their pretty domestic details and conviences, and kept snug and trim, with trim grass-plots, with all the subordinate avenues and garden approached well graveled, clean sweep and free of refuse and everything wholesome and orderly, there is apt to be a look of generally untidiness, as if all the residual rubbish of years had been dumped therein. Not unfrequently a railroad runs its tracks in such a manner as to expose the rear of plenty of houses to the eye of the traveler over it—whose sense of neatness is offended by the square rods of back-yards encumbered up with every conceivable variety of second-hand, damaged and invalided article known to domestic use from a horse cart disabled by broken thills and wrecked wheels, to the ghost of the baby carriage which survives two generations of children; interspersed with smashed crockery, rusty and condemned tinware, old boots, sardine boxes, disabled junk bottles, hoop spirts which would have outlived all usefulness if they had ever had any, chips, burdock, mullin, ashes, half-burned lumps of wasted coal, all imaginable litter, trash, debris and dirt. On the other hand, nothing is prettier than a cottage which is thoroughly well kept in rear as at its more public portion. It seems inevitably rendolent of a purer, sweeter, happier domestic life than one with heaps of festering rubbish crowding hard upon it.

GRASS ON RICH LAND.—Wm. V. S. Beekman is right in believing that hay or grass sown on liberally manured land is more nutritious than if grown on poor soil. The difference is less noticed in hay; but every farmer must have seen that cattle and horses will eat nearly bare the grass from manure parts of long cropped fields, while the unmanured part will almost be untouched. Of course the rank grass growing around fresh dropping is offensive, but I refer to soil made rich by continuous manuring with compost. I have seen the same thing on undrained land, cattle following in the line of the drain as accurately as could the man who dug it. Where this is the case, something is doubtless due to the effects of subsoiling, as a good drain should make dry one or two rods wide on each side of it, Top-dress one-half the pasture early in Spring with guano, superphosphate, or any fertilizer, and you will find that the cattle will stay on that part of the field most of the Summer through. It is evident that to some extent the composition of the same variety of plants varies on different soils. An expert in tobacco will tell whether the weed been grown on low, mucky soil, or on dry upland, and a healthy cow, with clover-scented breath, ought to have more delicate sense of taste than a taser of tobacco. The superiority of old pastures is chiefly because long-cultivated soils are less fertile. Cattle will pick the grass out of the fences and have young clover till it acquires age and solidity. Young, newly-seeded grass will not keep cows up to their milk, and still less produce abundance of cream and butter without meal, which should be fed regularly till the first of June, or longer if the cows will eat it. The pay will come in a larger mass of richer milk all the season. It is impossible to use grain more profitably than in feeding it to good cows, which will return it to you in the milk-pail, vastly improving the quality, if not increasing the quantity of milk.

DESTROYING THE BARK LOUSE.—There are several species of bark-lice, all more or less injurious to the plants upon which they live, and some are rather difficult to destroy. The particular species infesting the apple tree (Aspidius conchiformis) can usually be destroyed by thoroughly washing the bark with strong soapsuds or with a potash lye. The "scale bug" which infests the orange tree (coccus citri) is very similar in its habits to the apple bark louse, but it is more difficult to kill. A vigorous use of soapsuds seems to be only a transient remedy. The application of alcohol is also transient in its results. Lately this insect has made its appearance in the orange orchards in Los Angelos valley, California, injuring the quality of the fruit to some extent, and threatening to destroy the trees. Some of the leading orange culturists in that locality have been experimenting on the effects of the various remedies that have been from time to time suggested, and, according to a card which they have published in the Los Angelos Herald, have succeeded in finding a sure remedy! The principle ingredient in the remedy used is carbonic acid gas, and it is applied by the use of an ordinary portable "fire extinguisher." The strength of an ordinary charge is simply reduced, and it is applied directly to the trees. The inventor lays no claim to any patent and Californians say that any of the common patent extinguishers can be successfully used.

ICE HOUSE FOR FIVE DOLLARS.—A neighbor of mine, says a correspondent has an inclosure of about six feet square in the clear, and six feet high. The walls are formed of old refuse timbers thrown closely together, with no regard to form or comeliness. The roof is made of old clock boards. The entire cost of this building did not exceed five dollars, and practically consider, it is a success; not ambitious of containing thirty-five loads of ice, but simply five loads. Ten years this little unpretentious house has been used for ice, and never yet dishonored a draft upon its crystal deposit. About six inches of sawdust was spread about upon the ground floor, and in packing a space of about nine inches was left between the ice and the walls of the building for sawdust, and about nine inches of sawdust was spread upon the top of the ice, and the thing was fixed. The three main principles observed here will always insure a supply of ice, viz: good storage, and plenty of sawdust. With these rules adhered to, a corner in an old pen-shed will prove quite adequate in preserving ice.

HUNDREDS of acres in New England are going to waste, that might be devoted to the pasturage of sheep if it were not for the dogs.—In the Connecticut valley, the farmers in a number of the towns have given up tobacco planting and gone to raising more useful crops.

APPLETONS' AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

NEW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA, was completed in 1863, since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the signal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, literature and art, have induced the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge, has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared, has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time, have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added, not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater fullicity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of scenery, architecture and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to Subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous colored Lithographic Maps.
