Feeding Farm Horses.

During a discussion on farm horses at a club in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, the following paper was read by a member: "The feeding of horses is an important point in their management. Many farmers would be great gainers by paying more attention to this matter. Some servants, when they have access to the corn bin, give the horses they have in charge too much corn. Many of them have erroneous notions that the more corn their horses get, the fatter they must be, and instances are not uncommon where six bushels a week are given to a single pair. Too much corn indisposes horses for eating clover, grass and, and occasionally subjects them to serious disease. Four bushels of good, sound oats weekly, along with a few Swedish turnips or other roots, and plenty of good straw, will keep a pair of healthy farm horses in good order through winter, even though they be pretty hard wrought. If, then, such an allowance be sufficient for a pair, it follows that waste is to give them more. Hay may have to be substituted for straw, but no more corn will be necessary to sustain them even when they have to go 'three in a horse' in the busy spring season. Pressed and healthy horses that are doing only fair work do not keep in good condition with these supplies. The master may inquire whether the cleanliness of the groom be not to blame for it. Servants that carefully feed their horses would be a gain to many masters, even though they paid them extra wages. Some horses are nice feeders, and need to be coaxed to eat. Horses that are greedy feeders, or that swallow their corn whole, should have it bruised or ground. A little chaff mixed with corn helps to make horses chew it—and well chewed is of more importance than many think. Unless it be well ground and mixed with saliva in their mouths, it is but imperfectly digested in their stomachs, and with no perfect digestion there its full value is not obtained. A full drink of water immediately after being fed corn should never be allowed to horses. When water is drank by them—the little that goes directly to their large intestines, and little of it is retained in their stomachs. In passing through them, however, the water carries considerable quantities of nutriment with it, which lodges in the intestines. If, then, the contents of a horse's stomach are washed out of it before they are digested, they are in a manner lost, no nourishment being derived from them. Colics in horses frequently arise from this cause, and to it the appearance of whole grain among the dung is often due.

The articles of food as well as the manner they get are also matters that demand consideration in the management of horses. Bere and barley are often given to them with profit instead of corn, and their relative value as articles of food stand in the same proportion as their specific weights do. Damp straw or hay should never be given as food to horses. The former is apt to cause them and the latter frequently their wind. It is affirmed by some that if their hay and straw be damp, and their corn be bruised horses can be kept at one-fourth less cost than when these are given them whole. Every one knows the value of grass as an article of food for horses. A month of it in the early part of the season, when the grass is young and tender, is worth two when it is old and tough. Great care must be taken of horses when put on grass—indeed, changes of food of any kind must to them be introduced with caution, as many have had to pay dearly for neglect of rule. Even a change of water has, at times, been known to effect some horses, so very sensitive does their alimentary canal seem to be. A shallow watering place in a running stream should never be allowed for horses while at grass. Fatal results have often been induced by their drinking sand along with water from such a place."

Pear Rasers.—My own theory of pear raising, based upon experience, observation and probably a little philosophy of the things, if written for the benefit of others, would be about as follows: During hot summer months, I would feed very little or no food, even as corn in the ear or husked, I would keep hogs upon green feed constantly, either grass, rape or rye, and feed them at regular intervals, once or twice per day, upon meashed feed; either shorts, chopped oats or rye, buckwheat, etc., feed in troughs. When fed in this way, and at the same time allowed access to water and shade, hogs will bear cooking through the hot months—a very good time, if not the best, to take on flesh. This puts them in the best condition for corn feeding, which should commence about the first of September, when the new corn is still soft and tender. Treated in this way, hogs become probably as perfect as any method could make them. Upon the whole, too, I believe it the cheapest and most economical. Cor. Germantown Telegraph.

Dominique Fowls.—The London Field says of this variety, which it designates American:

"There are two or three useful and good breeds of poultry that are not well known in England. One of the oldest established, and certainly one of the most useful, is the Dominique. The breed more closely resembles our Cuckoo Dorking than any other. English variety. It differs, however, in having only four toes—a great advantage, by the way, in a practical point of view—and the legs being yellow. Each feather is of a very light gray, barred across with darker slaty-blue bars or pencilings. The Dominique cocks are showy birds, with full saddles and hackles, and plumage, well matched sickle feathers. They should weigh from six to eight pounds when mature. As table fowls they should necessarily be short-legged, full chest, and broad in the back. The ear lobes should be red, and the wattles and comb large, the former of medium size. The merits of this breed will recommend them to persons residing in the country as well worthy of promotion in the poultry yard; whether as layers of eggs, or of meat, as sitters, or nurses, they are invaluable."

An Easton man "sees" the "dollar store," and goes one better, having opened a "ninety-nine cent store." But we shouldn't think he could get much of a store for ninety-nine cents.

Action will, a silvery voice, plenty of brass, and a moderate of tin, win golden opinions.

APPLETONS' AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

NEW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA was completed in 1863 since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the unequal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, literature and art, have indeed the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

Within the set ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge, has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the miscellaneous progress, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has accordingly been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in the nature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added, not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater publicity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of scenery, architecture and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to Subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous colored Lithographic Maps.

The ever-increasing circulation of this excellent monthly proves its continued adaption to popular desires and needs. Indeed, when we think into how many homes it penetrates every month we cannot consider it as one of the educators as well as entertainers of the public mind, for its vast popularity has been won by no appeal to stupid prejudices or depraved tastes.—Boston Globe.

The character which this Magazine possesses for variety, enterprise, a taste wealth, and literary culture too, has kept pace with it has not led the times, should cause its fourth year to regard it with justifiable complacency.
