Mold on Canned Fruit.

The Montgomery, (O.,) Horticultural Society having been asked, "What produces Mold on Canned Fruit," a discussion followed, which we find reported in the Ohio Farmer as follows:

Mrs. R. P. Brown in practice managed to get rid of mold on her canned fruit, to a large extent, by cutting pieces of paper of the proper size, and dipping them in alcohol, which she places on the top of her fruit before sealing.

Mrs. John Bull said she was very rarely troubled with mold on fruit when she uses tin cans.

Mrs. Ramsey thought fruit more liable to it when put up in glass jars than in tin cans.

Mr. John Kennedy thought mold on fruit was more of a protection than otherwise. For many years past he had been in the habit of putting away in bottles, for future use, large quantities of maple syrup, and whenever he noticed mold forming on the top of it, he hailed it as a good sign—he then felt sure it wou'd keep for many years. But he did not think this was mold. He believed it to be something else. It seems to ascend from the bottom of the bottles, and settling on the top there assumes a leathery consistence, hermetically sealing them, render ng their contents perfectly safe. In curing his hams he had always noticed something similar to this accumulating on them when they were doing well, and was then always confident they would keep a long time.

Mrs. Corroll did not believe the mold which forms on fruit and jelly which forms on molasses were identical.

The ladies controverted the position of Mr. K., that mold was an advantage under any circumstances, asserting that the fruit in contact with it was always flavorless and more or less decayed, and that any process by which it could be prevented from forming would be a forward step gained in the art of housekeeping.

Mr. Mumma believed mold on fruit was caused by the atmospheric air coming in contact with it, and its presence indicated that the sealing process had not been perfect. He believed it was poisonous.

Concerning the Ear Marks of Butter Cows.

Hon. John Shattuck, a noted butter dairyman of Chenango Co., N. Y., said at a late Convention of the New York State Dairyman's Association that he had found the color on the inside the ear to be one infallible guide in the selection of a good butter cow. If the skin on the inside the ear is of a rich yellow color, the cow was sure to give a good quality of milk; that is, milk rich in butter. He said in all his experience he had never known this sign to fail. Mr J. W. North, in the Maine Farmer gives some further information concerning the subject. He observes that cows producing very high colored butter have a large amount of the ear secretion, in many instances the whole internal surface being covered with a thick, orange colored, oily matter; on the other hand, the light-colored butter-makers present a thin and pale yellow secretion, in some cases found only on the bottom of the ear. His theory is that every animal has the power of secreting a certain amount of this yellow pigment. If the quantity be sufficiently large, secretion will take place freely in the mammary glands, the ear and skin. If, however, the production be limited, the tendency may be wholly toward the milk glands and ear, causing the animal to exhibit a pink hide, or the skin may be almost the sole avenue of escape from the body, the butter in consequence being light colored; or there may be so little coloring matter evolved, as to furnish none to the skin, and a very scanty supply to the ear and milk. In selecting Jersey cows, in order to judge in regard to the color of their butter he recommends that the ear be inspected.

Dr. Sturtevant, in his recent address before the Connecticut State Board of Agriculture, alluded to this color of the ear in selecting cows, but he thought some caution should be observed in clearing away the secretion that may have accumulated on the skin, so that the true color of the skin on the inside of the ear may be seen. Otherwise the accumulated secretion, if taken for the true color of the skin inside the ear, would deceive as it might be darker or exhibit a deeper color than that of the true skin. He regarded the color of the ear as a good guide in respect to the color of the butter which the cow would yield.—Rural New-Yorker.

How to Cook Beefsteak.—Some time since a complete encyclopedia of useful knowledge in human form became an inmate of a family. When this learned guest came among them he was constituted as an oracle in many cases, and was asked one morning "wouldn't he tell or show them a better way to cook the steak for breakfast?" He took the thin, long handled frying pan from its nail and putting it on the stove, heated it quite hot. In this he put the pieces of steak previously pounded, but to their surprise did not put a particle of butter in the frying pan, and did not salt his steak. He allowed the steak to merely glaze over, and then turned it quickly to the other side, turning it several times in this manner, until it was done. Four minutes were employed in this operation but a juicier stake was never eaten. It was, when done, laid on the platter, previously warmed, and was buttered and salted and set a moment in the hot oven. Allowing the steak to heat but a moment on each side, helped it to retain all its sweet juices and putting the salt on at the last moment after it was on the platter, drew out its juices.

Softening Hard Water.—This is usually done with sal soda, but the effect is to hurt the clothes that are washed in the water thus prepared, and the hands also. It is because there is an excess of the soda, more than unites with the acid of the water which makes it hard. The remedy is easy: Use enough of the salt to take up the acid and no more. In this way both acid and soda disappear, leaving a neutral salt, which is harmless. Test a certain amount of water, beginning with a very little soda and adding more if you find you need it.

The poet who sent an effusion entitled, "Nothing but Flowers" to a paper for publication is on the ragged edge of mortification. The poem appeared as "Nothing but Fleas." When the compositor was reasoned with he said he thought there ought to be something "lively" about the poem.

APPLETONS' AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

NEW REVISED EDITION.

Entirely rewritten by the ablest writers on every subject. Printed from new type, and illustrated with Several Thousand engravings and Maps.

The work originally published under the title of THE NEW AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA was completed in 1863, since which time the wide circulation which it has attained in all parts of the United States, and the signal developments which have taken place in every branch of science, literature and art, have induced the editors and publishers to submit it to an exact and thorough revision, and to issue a new edition entitled THE AMERICAN CYCLOPEDIA.

Within the last ten years the progress of discovery in every department of knowledge, has made a new work of reference an imperative want.

The movement of political affairs has kept pace with the discoveries of science, and their fruitful application to the industrial and useful arts and the convenience and refinement of social life. Great wars and consequent revolutions have occurred, involving national changes of peculiar moment. The civil war of our own country, which was at its height when the last volume of the old work appeared has happily been ended, and a new course of commercial and industrial activity has been commenced.

Large accessions to our geographical knowledge have been made by the indefatigable explorers of Africa.

The great political revolutions of the last decade, with the natural result of the lapse of time have brought into public view a multitude of new men, whose names are in every one's mouth, and of whose lives every one is curious to know the particulars. Great battles have been fought and important sieges maintained, of which the details are as yet preserved only in the newspapers or in the transient publications of the day, but which ought now to take their place in permanent and authentic history.

In preparing the present edition for the press, it has according y been the aim of the editors to bring down the information to the latest possible dates, and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the newest inventions in the practical arts, as well as to give a succinct and original record of the progress of political and historical events.

The work has been begun after long and careful preliminary labor, and with the most ample resources for carrying it on to a successful termination.

None of the original stereotype plates have been used, but every page has been printed on new type, forming in fact a new Cyclopædia, with the same plan and compass as its predecessor, but with a far greater pecuniary expenditure, and with such improvements in its composition as have been suggested by longer experience and enlarged knowledge.

The illustrations which are introduced for the first time in the present edition, have been added, not for the sake of pictorial effect, but to give greater lucidity and force to the explanations in the text. They embrace all branches of science and of natural history, and depict the most famous and remarkable features of scenery, architecture and art, as well as the various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although intended for instruction rather than embellishment, no pains have been spared to insure their artistic excellence; the cost of their execution is enormous, and it is believed they will find a welcome reception as an admirable feature of the Cyclopædia, and worthy of its high character.

This work is sold to subscribers only, payable on delivery of each volume. It will be completed in sixteen large octavo volumes, each containing about 800 pages, fully illustrated with several thousand Wood Engravings, and with numerous colored Lithographic Maps.
