CUMBERLAND COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

THE Society will hold its first annual meeting on THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1844, at 10 o'clock, A. M. at the Court House in Carlisle. The County Hall will be prepared for the reception of all such articles of domestic manufacture as may be exhibited for premiums and, which can be conveniently placed in a room. All others, such as horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, agricultural implements &c. will be exhibited at the farm of F. Watts, Esq. one mile west of Carlisle, where comfortable and safe provision will be made for them. The ploughing match will commence at 8 o'clock, P. M. where farmers are invited to produce their teams and ploughs to compete for excellence in ploughing. The field selected is a clover sod of limestone land free from stone and, which has been mowed this season for hay and again for seed. This being the first public effort of the society to establish itself in the confidence of the farming interests we do not expect any large or varied exhibition of agricultural and horticultural productions or implements, but we cordially invite all who have any thing of the kind which deserves the approbation of the society or which tends to improvement, to exhibit it. We trust that our annual exhibition next year we may have all that severity of competition which time will enable us to prepare, and which will prove to be the life of the society and the success of the excellent design it has in view. By order of the Society.

F. WATTS, President.

CARLISLE, PA.

Wednesday, October 9, 1844.

Let the Infamous Slanderers of Henry Clay read the following!

☞ The people are aware that the Rev. HENRY B. BASCOM, one of the most distinguished ministers of the Methodist Church in this country, lately wrote a letter pronouncing the foul charges made by the Locofoco press against the moral character of HENRY CLAY, to be "utterly and basely false." For this expression of truth and act of justice to an eminent but injured citizen, Dr. Bascom himself has been most wickedly and wantonly assailed. The Lexington (Ky.) Observer of September 18th, in introducing the following statement, says: "The Elders and officers of the various Christian churches in the city of Lexington, of each political party, have thought it due to Dr. Bascom, as well as to themselves, and to the claims of truth and justice, to vindicate the reputation of Dr. B. against the foul aspersions of the Locofoco newspapers, by a public attestation to his worth and virtue—a denial of all the imputations and allegations made against him, and by bearing themselves the same testimony in reference to the moral character of Mr. CLAY, as was borne by Dr. B. in his letter to Dr. Goble.

We subjoin the statement as follows:

"REV. H. B. BASCOM.

"This distinguished divine, urbane gentleman, and devoted Christian, whose purity of life, burning eloquence, high intellectual endowments, fervent zeal in his Master's cause, have spread his name over our broad land, was recently applied to by Dr. J. J. Goble, to inform him as to his moral character and correct deportment of our distinguished neighbor, the Hon. Henry Clay, who, it was believed, had been falsely and maliciously assailed. For his response, bearing testimony to the correct deportment and good moral character of Mr. Clay, Dr. Bascom has been denounced as a hypocritical liar, a perjured blasphemer, an impious libeller, and other most degrading and dishonoring accusations heaped upon him. We, his friends and neighbors of all religious denominations, therefore, feel called upon by considerations of justice to a slandered and injured gentleman, to pronounce these charges grossly false and cruelly unjust, without a shadow of foundation; and do hereby bear the same testimony as contained in his letter as to the moral character of Mr. CLAY, as far as we know and believe.

Methodist Ministers.—Stephen Chipley, and N. Head ington.

Stewards of Methodist Church.—Joseph Mitchell, P. Scott, R. Ruckel, Nathaniel Shaw, L. P. Laug, W. King, Wm. Rice, Joseph George, Jno Leonard, Hiram Shaw, B. T. Beeler, R. Hullet, Gustavus Lilly, John L. Elbert.

Elders in Christ in Church.—D. Warner, Wm. Vanpell, Levi T. Benson, Samuel Finch.

Minister of Baptist Church.—W. F. Broaddus.

Baptist Ministers.—B. F. Drake, J. M. Howell, R. Freeze.

Rector of Protestant Episcopal Church.—Edward F. Berkley.

P. E. Minister.—John Ward.

Vestry of the P. E. Church.—D. M. Craig, J. J. Hunter, H. L. Dodley, Thomas Huggins, Jas. Marsh, H. H. Timberlake, William Eccles, Maslin Smith.

Elders and Deacons of 2d Presbyterian Church.—R. Pinckl, James C. Todd, David Bell, jr., W. A. Leavy, James C. Butler, John F. Leavy, Geo. W. Norton.

Elders and Deacons of 1st Presbyterian Church.—J. L. McDowell, Abraham Van Meter, John L. Price, Thomas C. Greer, L. Carter, Isaac C. Van Meter.

The Observer adds: "It is proper to say, that the Methodist Episcopal Conference, being in session at Bowling Green, nearly all the Methodist Divines, connected with the church and the University, are absent, and consequently their names are not attached to the foregoing paper."

Besides this emphatic testimonial in Mr. Clay's favor, letters are published from Dr. Nash, of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. N. H. Hall, Pastor of one of the Presbyterian churches in Lexington, which ought to cover with shame the foul slanderers of Henry Clay. We subjoin the conclusion of Mr. Hall's letter:

"I have been the Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Lexington, nearly twenty two years. My first residence when I came to this place was joining Mr. Clay's farm, and ever since I have lived in the neighborhood, and have known this honorable gentleman, and it gives me pleasure to say, that I have never witnessed an act, or heard an expression from Mr. Clay that was not in conformity with the strictest morality; his character among the great mass of his neighbors, is that of a high minded, honorable kind and benevolent gentleman. To a wide, sir, I believe that Mr. Clay's moral character is as good, and far better than that of the political men with whom I have been acquainted, and, I consider him more principally qualified in every respect for the Presidency of the United States at the present crisis, than any man in them. And the honest and anxious desire of my heart is, that in this the good providence of God he may be elected to that high and responsible office.

Yours, respectfully,

N. H. HALL."

☞ Which will you believe, people of Pennsylvania, the statements of this body of Ministers of the Gospel, or the foul slanderers, the prostituted locofoco press?

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

☞ Republish it throughout the length and breadth of the land—publish it in every city, town and village—post it up in every furnace, and forge, and manufactory, old store, and workshop, and farm house—proclaim it on the mountain top—proclaim it in the valley, let the far down in the bowels of the earth resound with it where the brawny miner is at his lonely work—let it be whispered in the ear of the slanderer, and let the echo come back from his own dwelling, that the slanders against HENRY CLAY are rebuked by the testimony of the Ministers of the Gospel.

THE GRIDIRON;

OR, PADDY MULLOWNEY'S TRAVELS IN FRANCE.

A CERTAIN old gentleman in the west of Ireland whose love of the ridiculous quite equalled his taste for claret and fox hunting, was wont upon certain festive occasions, when opportunity offered, to amuse his friends by drawing out one of his servants who was exceedingly fond of what he termed his "thravels," and in whom a good deal of whim, some queer stories, and perhaps, more than all, long and faithful services had established a right of loquacity.—He was one of those few trusty and privileged domestics, who, if his master unheedingly uttered a rash thing in a fit of passion, would venture to set him right. If the squire said, "I'll turn that rascal off," my friend Pat would say, "Troth you won't sir;" and Pat was always right for if an altercation arose upon the "subject matter in hand," he was sure to throw some good reason, either from service—general good conduct—or the delinquent's "wife and childher," that always turned the scale.

But I am digressing. On such merry meetings as I have alluded to, the master, (after making certain "approaches" as a military man would say, to the preparatory steps in laying siege to some extravaganza of his servant,) might, perchance, assail Pat thus: "By the bye, Sir John, (addressing a distinguished guest,) Pat has a very curious story, which something you told me to-day reminds me of. You remember, Pat (turning to the man, evidently pleased with the notice thus paid to himself)—you remember that queer adventure you had in France?"

"Troth I do sir," grins forth Pat.

"What?" exclaims Sir John, in feigned surprise, "was Pat ever in France?"

"Indeed he was," cries mine host; and Pat adds, "Ay, and farther, plase your honor."

"I assure you, Sir John," continues my host, "Pat told me a story once that surprised me very much, respecting the ignorance of the French."

"Indeed," rejoins the baronet, "really, I always supposed the French to be a most accomplished people."

"Troth then, they're not sir," interrupts Pat.

"Oh, by no means," adds mine host, shaking his head emphatically.

"I believe, Pat, 'twas when you were crossing the Atlantic?" says the master, turning to Pat with a seductive air, and leading him into the "full and true account" (for Pat had thought fit to visit North Amerikay, for "a raison she had," in the autumn of the year ninety-eight.)

"Yes, sir," says Pat, "the broad Atlantic," a favorite phrase of his, which he gave with a brogue as broad, almost, as the Atlantic itself.

"It was the time I was lost in crossin' the broad Atlantic, a comin' home," began Pat, decoyed into the recital; "whin the winds began to blow, and the sae to row, I, that you'd think the Colleen dhas (that was her name) would not have a mast left but what would row out of her.

"Well, sure enough, the masts went by the board, at last, and the pumps were choked, (divil choke them for that same,) and av coorse the wather gained an us, and troth to be filled with wather is neither good for man or baste; and she was sinkin' fast, settlin' down, as the sailors call it, and faith I never was good at settlin' down in my life, and I liked it then less nor ever; accordainly we prepared for the worst, and put out the boat, and got a sack of bishkits, and a cask o' pork, and a keg o' wather, and a trifle o' rum aboard, and any other little matthers we could think iv in the mortall hurry we wor in—and faith there was no time to be lost, for my darlint, the Colleen dhas, went down like a lump o' lead, afore we wor many strokes o' the oar away from her.

"Well, we thrifled away all that night, and next morgin, we put up a blanket on the end av a pole as well as we could, and thin we sailed jigant, for we darn't show a stitch o' canvass the night before, becase it was blowin' like bloody murther, savin' your presence, and sure it's the wondher of the world we won't swally'd alive by the ragin' sae.

"Well—away we went, for more than a week, and nothin' before our two good lookin' eyes but the canopy iv heaven, an the wide ocean—the broad Atlantic—not a thing was to be seen but the sae and the sky; and is mighty purty things in themselves, throth they're no great things when you've nothin' else to look at for a week together—and the barest week in the world, so it was long, would be more welkim. And then soon enough throth, our provisions began to run low; the bishkits, and the wather, and the rum—throth that was gone first of all—God help us—and oh! if was thin starvation began to stare us in the face—Oh! mur thur, murthur, captain darlint," says I, "wish we could see land any where," says I.

"More power to your elbow, Paddy, my boy," says he; "for sich a good wish, and throth it's myself wishes the same."

"Oh," says I, "that I may chase you sweet queen iv heaven, spitting it was only a dissolute islanth," says I, "inhabited wid Turks, sure they wouldn't be such bad Cristians as to refuse us a bit an sup. I'm afeard they'd be talkin' bad of any one," says he; "you don't know how soon you may want a good word put in for yourself, if you should be called to quarthers in the other world all of a sudden," says he.

"Thrue for you, captain darlint," says I; "I called him darlint, and made free wid him, you see, bekase divil tres makes us all equal"—"thrue for you, captain jewel—God bethink us and furgit, I owe no man any spite"—and throth that was divil thrue. Well, the hat blew it, we larned to sail the wather like a duck, and we gone at last, and we passed the night mighty cowlish, sweet; and as soon as day the sun riz most beautiful out of the waves, thus was bright as silver, and as clear as crystal. But it was only the more cruel upon us, for we were beginning to feel terrible hungry, when all at once we thought I spied the land—I thought I felt my heart up an me throat, my jaw fell down, and I was astonished and I was astonished, and I was astonished.

"Well, we drew in to it, and we thought we'd be safe and we thought we'd be safe, and we thought we'd be safe, and we thought we'd be safe,
