

town, it was a truly affecting sight to see old and venerable officers, gentlemen drooping with years, Knights of St. Louis, citizens, women, in short every description of the serious and orderly inhabitants, surrounding the horse which the Prince of Condé rode, eager to touch his cloaths to kiss his hands, and mix their tears of joy with those of the followers of the Prince in his misfortunes. It was to this exalted character, a spectacle of the most affecting sensibility. The momentary silence which was occasioned by this hallowed language of nature, was instantly interrupted by the universal acclamations of "Vive la Roi XVII. Vive Condé."

"If the taking of Weissenbourg had been delayed, only 24 hours, a considerable number of decent inhabitants, which this town contains, were to be transported into the heart of France, and imprisoned with so many thousands who groan now in irons, or who daily bleed on the scaffold."

LONDON, Dec. 10.

Roland, the late minister of the Interior in France, who died, by want in a forest, in which he was obliged to conceal himself, was about 62 years of age, of a tall, but not robust figure, of unaffected manners, and of much simplicity in his appearance, his grey hairs being constantly permitted to flow over his shoulders. His literary powers it is unnecessary to notice.

The fortrefs of Biche, which the Prussians unsuccessfully attempted to take by a coup de main, appears like an Eagle's nest, perch'd on the summit of a rock: the ramparts are cut out in the middle of a rock; the embrasures of the artillery, the magazines, and a very deep well, are equally so; so that it is one of those extraordinary places which can be only taken by famine. It communicates by an high road with Wert and Haguenau, and by a more difficult one with Leiternberg and Busswillet. It is thus in the power of the French troops to molest General Wurmsler.

The Revolutionary Tribunal has condemned to death Dupont Dutertre, Ex-Minister of Justice, and Barnave, an Ex-Member.

DUKE OF ORLEANS.

The trial of this man occupied only four hours. When the act of accusation was read, he said, "that the day of his trial would be the happiest of his life." He was sentenced to die at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the 6th inst. and at four o'clock he was conveyed in a cart to the place of execution.

The eyes of the people were attentively fixed upon him. He discovered a state of stupefaction, which by some was tho't composure. The cart stopped by some accident upon the Place de la Egalité, before his palace—He surveyed it with much attention, and turned his head to look at it as long as he could. To the exclamations of indignation and curses bestowed upon him by the people he made no reply, nor did he appear much affected by them. When the cart arrived at the scaffold, he jumped upon it first, and immediately laid down his head to undergo that punishment to which he was sentenced.

Sam. Harrison, Deputy-Consul.

Lisbon, Dec. 10, 1793.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, to a gentleman in this town, dated Dec. 14.

"The risque of being captured by the Algerines is more dangerous than at any time hitherto, there being, by the last accounts from Cadiz, and Gibraltar, 18 sail of Algerines without the Straits. There are ten sail of Americans lying at Lisbon, and three at St. Ubes, waiting for the answer to our consul's application for a convoy. The reason the answer has not been given, is, they are waiting the return of a frigate they sent to Algiers. It is currently reported that the Dey of Algiers has broken some of the articles of the truce between him and the Portuguese. Should this be the case, they will keep them within the Straits again.

"Capt. George Haynes, of the schooner Patty, is safe arrived at Cadiz, after a passage of 34 days from Norfolk."

THEATRICALS.

OBSERVER, No. IV.

The Observer, being convinced, of the tendency of Theatric exhibitions, to mend, and not to injure the human heart; and having been long conversant with the prejudices of some good, and more bad men, who are opposed to the Stage, as productive of many evils to society and morals;—has taken, and shall continue to take, a humble stand in the New Theatre, and as far as he is capable, to notice the whole, and occasionally publish his remarks. The Observer, has not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance, with either managers or performers, and barely knows their faces by seeing them on the stage; he feels himself, in consequence, unprejudiced.

From the disposition of the managers, which appears in their exertions to oblige and gratify the public; the observer presumes, he shall not act an ungrateful part to them, by observations, meant only as hints, and proposed for the exercise of their, and the performers judgments.

With some knowledge in music, some acquaintance, and more affection for the Drama, he promises to notice with candor, as he certainly listens with delight; and if ever he wounds, it will be, with the purest intentions, to cure.

The Observer is fully sensible, that some imperfections, may occur, in effecting a business so extensive and complicated as the oversight of a Theatre, which can only be mended, by trial, and experiments; he is happy to see a number of reformations have already taken place, dictated by the good sense of the managers, and presumes they will continue to improve as experience shall dictate.

The Observer, cannot withhold a remark in favor of the instrumental accompaniments, to the vocal music last evening; he thinks they have never exhibited more accurate judgment; the relative softness, and strength, which true taste requires alternately to be adopted, on such an occasion, is frequently either omitted, or the shades run into each other, so as to confound.

Mrs. Warrel's voice, both as singer, and speaker, may be classed among the best: She pronounces and articulates with great propriety.

Mrs. Marshall appears to possess, almost all we wish in an actress: But an elevation of voice, and a more distinct articulation, would certainly add to her share of merit, which is already great.

Perhaps Mrs. Marshall's voice will on repetition, adapt itself better to the space. The observer hints to her, to speak a little slower.

Messrs. Bates and Darley, and Mrs. Shaw, The Observer, noticed with much satisfaction, did not, last evening, derogate from their former portion of applause.

Mr. Marshall is certainly one of the most gentlemanly men, that has been seen on a Stage.

At a meeting of upwards of 120 gentlemen at Grant's Tavern, Baltimore, the 22d. inst. the anniversary of the Birth Day of President of the United States, William Paca, Esquire, President—the following truly republican and patriotic TOASTS were drank:

1. GEORGE WASHINGTON, the early, the uniform, the steady, and unshaken friend of his country!
2. The proclamation of neutrality which offends, only the enemies of the peace, and the disturbers of the prosperity of the United States.
3. The People of the United States—may they never in the exercise of their rights as men, violate their duties as citizens.
4. The People of France—May their arduous struggle terminate in a free republican government.
5. To all nations at war, peace, and to all nations at peace, prosperity.
6. May the people of every country be permitted to enjoy that government which they think best adapted to produce their happiness.
7. May the United States soon have a respectable navy, and its harbours well fortified.
8. A navigation Act in due time without injurious and invidious distinctions.

9. The agriculture, commerce and manufactures of the United States.

10. May those persons who have encreased the means for extending trade, agriculture and manufactures, by restoring public credit, long be witness to the prosperity they have produced.

11. The general government; May the spirit which established it watch over its safety.

12. Congress. More wisdom or more patriotism to those whose measures would unsettle every thing and settle nothing.

13. The State Governments. May their citizens ever bear in mind that the wisdom and patriotism of the Senate of the United States depend wholly on the men they may choose to their several legislatures.

14. May the blessings of peace be continued to the people of the United States.

15. May the man we celebrate, long pilot the vessel of State.
