Our Destiny.

Upon the perpetuity of the Republican party depends the prosperity of the country. That it has been a constituent element of this prosperity for the past twenty years, is beyond successful contradiction. It is therefore a pertinent question, "Is there any thing in the Republican party that recommends it to the honest convictions of the people as deserving a success in this campaign?" It will be perfectly consistent to take a retrospective glance and observe what has been done. In doing this it will be manifest that the peculiar mission of the party is not complete. It has broken off the chains of slavery and secured civil rights to the emancipated, but "tissue ballots" have vitiated much of the legislative action in reconstructing rebel States. During the late session of Congress, after a struggle that made the whole machinery of finance tremble for fear of destruction, the Republican representatives succeeded in extending the National banking system, and until the enormous rebellion debt is paid its work will not be finished. Protective tariff has not become such a fixture in the polity of the nation, as to permit its truest and only consistent friends to cease their efforts for its maintenance. The great problem of education in the south is soon to become a leading feature in Congressional proceedings. Heretofore, the Republican party has had the fostering care of this work, and until something of a permanent character is accomplished her mission will not be fulfilled.

We, therefore, venture the assertion, that the grand old Republican party cannot be overthrown while its history is unwritten. Who is brave and daring enough to become its historian? We glory in the fact that it has not fulfilled its mission before the country, and until this results the majestic force of its principles will hold the fabric in place, and keep the power in exertion, in order that it may accomplish its destiny. Are there no other achievements before it? The party has always been aggressive. To it belongs the introduction of all the marked features that characterize our present progress in liberal government, and the possibilities are not yet exhausted. What may be in the womb of the future no one can fathom, but of this we are assured, that the party that has so faithfully met the exigencies of the past, is safe to be trusted for all the emergencies that can arise in the future. Are not these enough upon which to base the assertion, that there cannot exist such an anomaly as divided Republicanism? "He that is not for us is against us," is as true to-day as when first uttered. It is impossible to reach the conclusion that men who have been so earnest in proclaiming their unalterable adherence to the principles of the Republican party, will see them sacrificed to replace a party whose teaching they abhor, and whose career for twenty years has been a continued effort to regain

To the Grand Army Posts of the Eighteenth Congressional District of Pa.

An act of Congress approved Aug. 7th, 1882, provides that eight thousand three hundred copies of official records of the war of the rebellion shall be distributed by the Secretary of War as designated by Senators and Members of Congress. Four volumes are ready for distribution and it is estimated that each set, when completed, will comprise one hundred volumes. It is my desire to give each Grand Army Post of this district a complete set of this valuable work as a nucleus for a post library. All Grand Army Posts should advise me without delay so I can file their application with the Secretary of War, and I trust the newspapers of the district will give publicity to this notice so that no organization may be overlooked.

Huntingdon, Pa., Sept. 8, 1882.

The news of Maine is most glorious. Under the magnetic influence of her favorite son, Jim Blaine, Maine has redeemed herself from the control of the Greenback-Democratic Fusionists and again takes her place at the head of the Republican column, with the Republican Governor, a solid Republican delegation in Congress and a Republican Legislature, each branch of which will have nearly if not altogether a two-thirds majority.
