LAFAYETTE HONORED BY CAMP MEADE MEN

French Hero's Birth Anniversary Is Observed by New Division

Camp Meade, Md., Sept. 6.

The Lafayette Division of the new and rapidly growing American army is celebrating here today the anniversary of the birth of Lafayette. The Tricolor is flying by the side of the Stars and Stripes at several points in the big wooden city. This morning the soldiers are practicing with rifles, bayonets and artillery, to go to France at a later date on a mission similar to that which brought Lafayette to America. This afternoon they will lay aside their weapons and join on Liberty Field in paying tribute to the great Frenchman whose feats made possible the writing of such interesting pages in American history.

As was outlined in the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER yesterday, Senator Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, will address the lads this afternoon and tell them about Lafayette. Forty thousand of these khaki-clad Americans will assemble on the big field to listen. Mingled with them will be officers of the French army, who are here in an advisory capacity. An address will also be delivered by Major General Jesse McI. Carter, commander of the new division.

There will also be athletic contests, massed singing and band concerts this afternoon. The camp is open to visitors, and thousands are here to aid the soldiers celebrate the day. This evening the festivities will continue in the huts of the Knights of Columbus and the Young Men's Christian Association. In the main auditorium of the Knights the motion picture of Joan of Arc will be thrown upon the screen.

Permanent personnel for camp headquarters was announced this morning by Major General Carter. The officers who will compose the staff of Brigadier General Joseph A. Gaston, the camp commander, are: Major Arthur R. Kerwin, adjutant; Captain Frank F. Henneman, personnel adjutant; Captain William W. Hulin, inspector; Captain James M. Mullen, judge advocate; Major Guy L. Qualls, surgeon; Lieutenant George P. Marx, signal officer; Captain Robert Sigmund, ordnance officer; Lieutenant William L. Herbert, veterinary; Captain Robert C. Dover, exchange officer; Captain Walter L. Kelly, commanding officer provost guard company, and First Lieutenant Henry Nolley, commanding officer headquarters company.

ROOSEVELT AGAINST UNDEFENDED PEACE

Calls Plan That Would Make U. S. a "China of Occident" Silly

By the United Press

New York, Sept. 6.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, as the principal speaker at the Lafayette day exercises here today vigorously denounced any idea of a league of nations that would include Germany, Austria-Hungary and Turkey in its membership. He also branded as silly any assertion that a league of nations plan would guarantee peace to those who have not the will and power to prepare for their own defense.

"Support any such plan which is honest and reasonable," he said, "but support it as an addition to, and never a substitute for the policy of preparing our own strength for our own defense. To follow any other course would turn this country into a China of the Occident.

"I believe preparation should be starred by the introduction in this country of the principle of universal training and universal service, as practiced in Switzerland. There will be no taint of Prussian militarism in such a system. It will merely mean to fight for self-defense and a great democracy in which law, order and liberty are to prevail."

M. Jusserand, the French ambassador, attended the exercises and responded to the address of Colonel Roosevelt.

Officers of the American and Allied armies and navies were present among the guests of honor.

SHEEHAN PLACES DAUGHTER

Wills Register Gives Her Job in His Office

James B. Sheehan, Register of Wills, has appointed his daughter, Miss Estelle L. Sheehan, to the position of stenographer and typewriter in his office, created by Councils shortly before their summer recess at the request of Sheehan.

Sheehan, asking Councils Finance Committee to recommend the new position, declared it was made necessary by the increased volume of business.

Miss Sheehan's work is largely transcription of records and testimony in will contests. Her annual salary will be $1200. While learning her duties she worked several months gratuitously in the office.

Sheehan now draws a salary of $5000 a year. He refuses to recognize the validity of the Legislative act increasing his salary to $10,000 and abolishing his fees. His suit to continue taking fees and a $5000 salary, instead of taking a $10,000 salary and giving up the fees, is pending.

ARRIVAL OF WOUNDED HEROES IN PHILADELPHIA

Close to two score American soldiers who had been wounded in France arrived here this afternoon from Lakewood, N. J., where they have been recuperating day and week after week until only thin remnants of them are left, without promise of relief.

All Hope for Capture

So it is that the divisions of line and odd bits of divisions scraped together and sent forward after recent battles which almost destroyed them as fighting units are bearing the brunt of our onslaught and are never out of reach of our tanks and expecting every day will be their last one unless they have the luck to be captured. It is for that they all hope, as the only hope—to be made prisoners and relieved from this fear and horror.

They tell us these things frankly enough on our side of the lines, and in letters we pick up on battlefields we read their misery. One man of the 100th Grenadier Regiment wrote on August 28:

"The British are now a little more quiet. Just at the spot where we quartered a fortnight ago he began his advance and attacked with a hundred tanks. The Bavarians, who relieved us here, have nearly all been captured by the British. If they had left us in line another two days the war would have been over for me by this time. So are we in mortal danger every day, and we certainly could not be worse off with the British than we are here.

"The war cannot last much longer. We cannot hope fo rany further success. Our enemy is superior to us in numbers, and everything else, and victory is out of the question."

Another man, of the 190th Infantry regiment, writes in a letter home:

"We are lying here in a hellish position; no dugouts, but all in funk holes, with losses and again losses, and dead; so that we become almost mad. Since lying here I have been smoked out three times, and if this continues for long I shall cease to take part in it, you may be sure of that, for I am not hanging on so miserably merely to get my limbs shot to pieces after four years of war.

"We are going into rest. Our orders are to hold the position to the last man, and companies go into line here with twenty men. My God! If the Tommies only knew that! Alas, poor Germany!"

Letter Tells of Mutiny

In a letter from Germany found on a soldier, there is an account of a mutiny at the town of Neusse by men sent to our front.

"The troops in one train refused to go to the front, and looted and destroyed the refreshment room at the station. Even the Landstrum was called out, but the troops on their part took their rifles and showed they were quite prepared to shoot. Thereupon the Landsturm was withdrawn. The officers have no more control over their men."

The men who came through our line Wednesday all say the German army is profoundly resigned and that the men talk as those who are doomed. The strain of war has been too long and too bitter, and they are broken in spirit after the enormous failure of their last offensive.

Yet to be fair to them and to our men, who are not fighting cowards or white feathers, many of them, especially their machine gunners, are holding out in rear-guard actions with the courage of despair, and if that is not first class courage it is second best and takes a lot of beating.

On our side there is all the difference between one world and another, all the difference between th spirit of hope and of despair. It is utterly true to say that our men are going forward with gladness and exultation. They know the risks ahead. There is nothing one can tell them about the horrors of war. They know its fearful fatigue, the beastliness of things, the stench and dust of the battlefield, the wicked snap of machine-gun bullets and the howl of the high velocities. But, in spite of all that, they are marching forward with a light in their eyes and eager looks, and whole armies are on the move with a grim kind of joy.

An Astounding Pageant

It is an astounding pageant, these hundreds of thousands of men—English, Welsh, Canadians, Scottish and Australians—all moving in a long reaching tide, with horses and guns and transports, along tracks over old battlefields, going forward mile by mile very slowly because of the surge of traffic over narrow ways, but never stopping.

Dust rises from these moving legions in brownish clouds which the wind tosses above their steel helmets, and through this dust, on which the sun is shining hotly, there is a vision of brown masses of men, with the glint of steel on rifles and helmets and twinkling colors, red and blue and green, of staff badges and pennons.

There is a great music of war over all this scene. Scottish battalions go forward to the fighting line led part of the way by their pipers, and across the battlefields come the wild cry of the pibroch and the drone of many pipes. The English battalions are marching with brass bands playing of English marching tunes, and between whiles, merry bursts of ragtime. The crunching of heavy gun wheels over rough ground, officers shouting orders to their men, the hooting of lorry horns and motor horns and an incessant hum of airplanes overhead all make up a symphony which has a song of triumph in its theme.

A French artist friend of mine watched this scene, and it lighted fires in his eyes—the warrior look of our men, their splendor of physique and youth, their hardness and gravity, which seemed to him illumined by a sense of victory in their spirit. A young officer of a machine-gun section came down from the line slightly wounded, with a trickle of blood down his cheek, but there was a kind of glamour on his face as of some messenger of good fate, and seeing, perhaps, some look of understanding from the French painter, who was watching him, he turned and laughed and waved his hand.

And so it was with a young artillery officer who boarded my car after the break through and asked for a lift.

"Splendid going," he said. "Old Fritz is hopping it."

He laughed like a schoolboy, and then seeing the colonel of an artillery brigade riding up the track, shouted to him, "Hello, father! Going forward?"

Father and son were in the same line of business, and the older man turned in his saddle, smiled, and raised a warning hand, as thought to say: "Don't get into mischief, my boy."

It is difficult to keep in touch with the front line now, it is moving so fast and leaving great desolation behind. The signalers are working day and night to carry on their lines, and headquarters have to keep moving from one set of dugouts to another day by day. They find the German dugouts, enormously deep, all ready for them, the former lodgers having left in a hurry; and when I went to see our naval divisions I found officers behow ground down many wooden stairs leading to dank tunnels. They were working by candle-light, and there came shouts for more candles from officers in small caverns directing the progress of their men ahead and speaking to the guns over telephone wires.

One of these officers spread out his maps on a little table in his dugout and showed me the furthest point reached by the naval men and said:

"Good thing, this. The naval boys are all out and have done gloriously. They have got the enemy on the run."

Upstairs the trenches were full of wet chalk, slimy and slippery after the rain, so that it was hard to keep one's feet. Down them came a file of naval men in full fighting kit, and they climbed out of the trenches and went away over the open country to follow up their outposts.

WOUNDED HEROES RECEIVE OVATION

Thousands Cheer Convalescent Soldiers as They Ride Down Broad St.

COME FROM LAKEWOOD

Shouts of Welcome Arise as Men Arrive at Pennsylvania Station

No returning conqueror was ever given a warmer reception than that which greeted nearly two score of American soldiers, from France, at Broad Street Station this afternoon.

The lads came from the hospital at Lakewood, N. J., where they have been recuperating from wounds. They are in Philadelphia to attend the police carnival tomorrow.

The station fairly shook with cheers and music as the fighters limped from the train and made their way toward the gates. A cordon of policemen found it a strenuous task to protect the incoming Yanks from the thousands of friendly hands which extended toward they in all directions.

Many of the warriors hobbled on crutches and others trudged along with canes. Some were pale and wan—but they all smiled and there was a trace of tears in the eyes of many of them as they saw familiar faces here and there in the throng.

Met by Police Heads

The soldiers were met inside the gate by a committee composed of Acting Superintendent of Police Mills, Police Captains Tennent and Kenny, and Lieutenant Hamilton, of the Branchtown station.

Incidentally, all the members of the committee had tasted the smoke of battle themselves in earlier wars, and there was something deeper than an official welcome in the greeting they gave the boys in khaki.

As the soldiers lined up inside the gates, Acting Superintendent Mills pinned a red, white and blue badge on the breast of each.

The badges bore a picture of General Pershing and directly beneath the picture the words "Welcome to Our Heroes." At the bottom of the badge was a little Liberty Bell.

On reaching the street the men were helped into automobiles, piloted by the women drivers of the Motor Messenger Corps. Led by the Police Band the heroes were then escorted to the Hotel Walton.

Handkerchiefs Wave

Business practically stopped when the procession passed down Broad street. Cheers came from everywhere and hundreds of handkerchiefs fluttered from windows of "skyscrapers."

The men will be given a diner tonight and later will be the guests of the Police Carnival Committee at a theatre party. Tomorrow they will be taken on a sightseeing trip before they go to see the sports at the police carnival.

Private Nelson A. Jones, son of Mrs. Margaret Jones, 5109 Frankford avenue, was the only Philadelphian in the party. Jones is a member of Troop B, Second Cavalry. He was wounded in the chest by a machine gun bullet late in April, when he was sent out from Paris to help stem the German advance sweeping toward the French capital.

Jones received such short notice that he was to make the trip to Philadelphia that he didn't have time to notify his mother.

Jones was in the regular army, stationed at Fort Myer, when war was declared.

Captain Shaffer, who is a Red Cross officer, is the only one of the party who has not been in France. He is in charge of all the entertainment features at Lakewood. Lieutenant R. H. Hood, a medical corps officer with the party, saw service in France before America entered the war, with the British army.

It won't itch now, dear

will help to make it well and relieve the smart and pain.

Do not neglect a spot of eczema, rash, or other itching, burning sores, because children's skins are easily irritated, and if the hurt is neglected, obstinate trouble may persist in later life.

Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap were originated by a doctor and have been used by doctors for many years.

All dealers sell them.
