More proof that Pennsylvania's losses in the war were heavier than those of other states is daily coming from the War Department.

This state has maintained an average of about one-tenth of the casualties for the American expeditionary forces. In the official casualty report today more than one-sixth of the men whose names appear on the list for the nation are from this state, there being 404 for the country and sixty for Pennsylvania in the report.

Eleven men wounded and one dead of disease make up the city's report today. Relatives of one of the wounded in the list, Lieutenant George H. West, 6343 Germantown avenue, gassed at the battle of the Marne, in July, had not been notified until a few days ago.

According to recent letters to his wife the officer was confined to a base hospital from the time he was wounded until two days before the armistice, when he rejoined his unit.

Lieutenant West is only twenty-three years old and was formerly a member of the National Guards of Pennsylvania. He served on the Mexican border during the "raid troubles" in 1916. When his regiment was remustered he was sent to Camp Hancock for training. Here he entered the Reserve Officers Training School, and qualified as an officer. He received his commission while in the hospital, in France. He is a graduate of Central High School and was formerly a clerk for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Casualties for Camden have swelled the list of dead and wounded for this section for the last three days. Following are some of the recent reports:

Corporal Ralph E. Elder, 36 North Twenty-sixth street, shot through both eyes November 5, died of wounds twenty-one days later. He and three other men were mortally wounded while manipulating a machine gun under heavy fire in the Argonne, said the adjutant's report. He was twenty-five years old.

Sergeant Major Johnson Read, son of the Rev. John R. Read, Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, succumbed to pneumonia in France February 27. He was twenty-seven years old and on the day of his death lacked two days of having been in the army a year. He trained at Camp Dix and sailed for France with the Headquarters Company, Seventy-eighth Division. Previous to joining the army he had been employed as a teacher in the Camden Commercial College. He was for three years a government clerk in Washington and worked finally for the National Cash Register Company, in Camden.

In two instances recently relatives of Camden soldiers on the casualty list cannot be located. A former employer of Private Chester Angelo, a member of the 114th Infantry, who gave his emergency address as 820 South Third street, is making a search for the soldier's mother. The War Department reports him wounded December 5, 1917, and again at St. Mihiel September 17 of last year. He is twenty-two years old and has been in the army since April, 1917.

75 DEAD IN LIST OF CASUALTIES

Wounds Prove Fatal to 14 and 61 Are Victims of Disease

NONE KILLED IN ACTION

WAR OFFICIALS STRIKE BACK AT CHAMBERLAIN

Undue Severity Against Military Prisoners Denied—Senator Himself Accused

Washington, March 4.—Specific and detailed denial of the statements made in the Senate by Chairman Chamberlain, of the Military Committee, both as to the individual cases of alleged undue severity of treatment of military prisoners and as to the broader attack of the Senator on the whole American system of military justice, is contained in a letter from Major General Crowder, judge advocate general, to Secretary Baker.

The letter was placed in the Congressional Record last night by Representative Lunn, of New York, who had written Secretary Baker asking for "General Crowder's version of the matter," which he desired to compare with statements made by Brigadier General Samuel T. Ansell, former acting judge advocate general, in the latter's appearance before congressional committees and published correspondence.

Letters submitted with this hitherto unpublished report show that Secretary Baker placed it in Senator Chamberlain's hands on the day it was submitted by General Crowder. In sending the report to Mr. Lunn the Secretary wrote:

"Immediately after the original discussion of this subject in the Senate I asked General Crowder to give me a comprehensive memorandum covering the whole matter. This letter resulted. Its statements are, I think, most reassuring."

General Crowder in his letter makes the counter-charge that Senator Chamberlain, as chairman of the Military Committee, was directly responsible for certain admitted shortcomings of the army legal system which the department had sought to have remedied more than a year ago through a remedial amendment, upon which no action has been taken by the congressional military committees.

"All authentic data that would throw light on the correctness of Senator Chamberlain's complaints," the letter said, "are to be found in the accumulated records of my office. And I could wish that he had afforded me an opportunity, however scanty, to lay before him the general tenor of those records or any part of them before advancing publicly the assertions contained in his remarks on military justice."

YOUTH ROBS ROBBER

Chester Man Struck With Blackjack by Intruder

Chester, Pa., March 4. — Leedom Adams, son of Mr. and Mrs. David B. Andrews, of Chester pike, in Ridley Park, had a thrilling hand-to-hand encounter with a burglar in the home of his parents. The young man, his sixteen-year-old sister and a younger brother had gone to their rooms for the night. Mr. Andrews, who is a Philadelphia business man, had gone out with his wife.

The raising of a window downstairs attracted the attention of the older youth and, in his stocking feet, he proceeded downstairs to investigate, when he was confronted by the burglar, who threw the rays of a flashlight in his face and prevented him from identifying the intruder. The next instant the two were at grips. The burglar struck Adams in the head with a blackjack and left him senseless on the floor. Then he escaped through the open window. Attracted by the noise of the struggle, the brother and sister hurried downstairs, armed with pokers, and stumbled over the unconscious form of their brother, too late to be of assistance. Young Andrews was removed to the Taylor Hospital, where his condition is improving.

LOANS NOT TAXABLE

Judge Monaghan Decides Insurance Policy Borrowing Is Exempt

Insurance policy loans, for which promissory notes are taken, are not taxable, according to an opinion filed by Judge Monaghan. The decision was made in the equity suit of the Provident Life and Trust Company against the board of revision of taxes, the receiver of taxes and the city.

The decision is important, as the amount of notes sought to be taxed extended into millions. The insurance company, which under protest made returns on personal property for the years 1914, 1915 and 1916, contended that these loans were not subject to the tax of 4 mills, as claimed by the city.
