JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Talks of Next Year's Debs—She Hears of the Return of Captain Bodine and Lieutenant Eliason. Devon Horse Show Plans

DO YOU KNOW that Margaret Dallett, who is to be a debutante next season, is a very attractive young person? In coloring she is a great contrast to her sister, who is a Titian blonde, for Margaret has brown hair and dark eyes. I saw her recently at a party for the younger set and she was wearing such a pretty white organdie frock, with a high rolled collar at the back of the neck, and the skirt of the gown had wide tucks and a sash of organdie tied in a great bow at the back. Margaret is the daughter of the late Judge Morris Dallett and a sister of Marie Dallett, who married Randall Pennington. Marie came out in the season of 1911-12, which will go down in history as having seen the debut of the prettiest set of girls for years. There were the Roberts twins, and Kate Kremer, and Polly Page, and Marion Fowle, and Marie Dallett, and Rachel Lewis, Mabel Norris, Ella Brock and oh, ever so many others!

Margaret Dallett will be introduced at a tea in the fall.

I HEAR that Captain William Bodine is coming home this week on the Leviathan. His father and mother have gone over to New York to meet him, but his wife and children could not go, as they are all three down with whooping cough. Isn't that too bad? You know the youngest baby was born after Captain Bodine had gone to France, so he has not seen it yet. Mrs. Bodine was Angela Forney, and is certainly one of the very prettiest of the younger matrons.

Captain Bodine was with the Seventy-ninth Division.

I HEAR that Herbert Casey, who is engaged to Eleanor Verner, is also on his way home. He is on the Freedom, which is scheduled to arrive on Sunday. And Lieutenant Eliason is coming on that ship also. Most of the boys' families go on to meet them, but it's not much satisfaction except for the thrill you get when you see the ships coming up the river, for it's almost impossible to recognize any one boy on board, and you just can't get to see them until they are in camp. But as one father told me: "When I saw that ship coming in and they told me it was the — — — I could not see a thing, but I just screamed and yelled for all I was worth, and then I would be ashamed to say what I did next." I guess it would not be hard for us to surmise what he did, would it? And there is a certain satisfaction in being able to give way at last, after the strain of having them gone so long.

THERE are all kinds of plans for the Devon Horse Show, and yesterday the committee announced that its roster of judges for the show is complete.

Reginald Vanderbilt will judge harness horses and harness ponies in conjunction with Harrison L. Van Schaick, of Chicago. James G. Marshall and Lewis E. Waring, both of New York, will judge saddle horses and saddle ponies.

James K. Maddox, of Warrenton, Va.; M. Roy Jackson, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Waring will judge hunters and jumpers. Frank H. Caven and Mr. Van Schaick will judge roadsters, and the veterinary inspectors will be Dr. J. W. Adams, Dr. J. C. Bartholomew and Dr. E. W. Powell.

The Devon committee, which consists of Dr. Tom Ashton, Charles Coxe and William Wanamaker, Jr., is congratulating itself upon having procured such able judges of horseflesh. Don't you like that "sporty" talk?

Mrs. Archibald Barklie, who is chairman of the carnival to be held in connection with the show, has been given the use of Mrs. Frank Clyde's home at 1521 Walnut street for all of next Wednesday. The different women's executive and subcommittees will meet there to discuss the diverse activities of their several organizations in connection with the carnival. The meetings will begin at 10 o'clock and doubtless will last well into the evening. Now if that isn't efficiency, I ask you?

Mrs. Charles A. Munn, who made such a splendid success as the chairman of the Bryn Mawr cup committee last year, is arranging for the prizes at the Devon show. Mrs. Paul D. Mills, Mrs. Munn's sister, says the great demand continues for boxes and they are now at a premium.

Mrs. Robert Kelso Cassatt is giving Mrs. Barklie first-hand help in her many activities, while Mrs. J. Kearsley Mitchell, 3d, has taken charge of the Top Shop, which makes it about certain that the children will find many novelties in the toy line to add to their collection at home.

Mrs. Robert E. Strawbridge, last year's chairman of the Bryn Mawr Horse Show, has accepted the chairmanship of the Devon raffle committee and will be in charge of the raffle booth on the polo grounds.

The activities of the many committees increase with the nearer approach of the event, and it's about sure that this year's Devon Horse Show will be one big affair!

2 DAYS' EVENTS LINK LINCOLN AND GRANT

Fifty-four Years Ago Booth, the Assassin, Was Killed; Tomorrow Is General's Birthday

Closely linked together are today and tomorrow in the history of the death of Abraham Lincoln and the birth of General Ulysses S. Grant.

Fifty-four years ago today John Wilkes Booth, the actor, who twelve days before had shot and killed Lincoln, was forced by a soldier in a barn near Port Royal, Va. And ninety-seven years ago tomorrow Ulysses S. Grant was born at Point Pleasant, Ohio.

Booth had leaped from the box in Ford's Theatre, after he had mortally wounded the President, and broke his leg. For twelve days, suffering terrible pain, he eluded War Department detectives and soldiers who followed close at his heels. Aided and accompanied by his friend, David Harold, Booth traveled through fifty miles of Maryland and Virginia swamps and thickets. Finally he was trapped in a barn on the Rappahannock river. The barn was surrounded by soldiers and Booth was asked to surrender. He refused. Booth, forced out by the flames, stumbled to the door with a revolver in his hand. As he did so Sergeant Boston Corbett, through a crevice near the door, shot the assassin in the head.

Tomorrow the great general, who was a close friend of America's best loved President, would have been ninety-seven years old had he lived. All through the country his memory will be honored.

The Union League, as has been its custom for many years, will drape its portraits of the former general and President with flags and flowers. The informal dinners which usually are given in honor of Grant will not be held this year because his birthday falls on a Sunday.

The affair was one of season at the University has been a gay one, but no event has shown as resplendently as the dance. Owing to the care taken in decorating the ballroom, the floor was not unduly crowded, and the raised platforms which ran around the edge of the room gave plenty of room for onlookers as well as for those who danced between the dances, which were as always throughout the night.

Refreshments were served before 12:30 and during the period between 12:30 and 1 a. m. Lieutenant Commander Dodge, U. S. N., and Lieutenant Colonel J. B. Haberkorn, U. S. A., were among the chaperons of the dance.

ORCHESTRA AT BEST IN FRANCK SYMPHONY

Noteworthy Performance of Great Work Given by Mr. Stokowski; Mme. Povla Frijsh the Soloist

What would have been the last of the season's Friday afternoon concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra had the "flu" not postponed the opening of the season last fall took place at the Academy of Music yesterday before a large audience. The concert opened with the ever-beautiful symphony in D minor of Cesar Franck, it being the second time this season that it has been on the program. This finest of all Gallic symphonies had an unusually poetic reading by Mr. Stokowski, who paid great attention to the architectural design, which is both complex and beautiful, as well as to the wealth of orchestral detail which makes up the tonal color of the work.

The performance by the Orchestra was one of the best that has been done during the entire season. The composition sounded almost like a gigantic piece of chamber music, so clearly defined were the various voices in the thematic work, and this, too, without the slightest loss of power in the places where the whole body is involved in loud passages. The symphony has numbers of spots unique in symphonic music, with its scherzo virtually surrounded around the slow movement and many other original devices of design, as well as of orchestral color, all of which Mr. Stokowski brought out clearly.

The other orchestral numbers were "a dance for orchestra entitled "Vision," by Louis Vierne, a French composer about whom it seems little is known, as all his compositions are still in manuscript, according to the program notes, and a ballade for orchestra, "Tam O'Shanter," by George W. Chadwick.

The first of these is a short work, very modern in feeling and harmonization, as well as in orchestration. It is not strikingly original and, strangely enough, seems to reflect the Russian school in instrumentation and the German school of Schoenberg and his followers in the harmonic scheme far more than the modern French of Debussy or Ravel. As Mr. Gogue says in his program notes, it might be called a study in dissonances and these are accentuated by the scoring of them, such as consecutive fourths or fifths with the vivid toned trumpet above and the oboe below. It is scored for a very large orchestra over the resources of which the composer has a good command. It is an interesting work, but not particularly impressive from any standpoint.

The Chadwick ballade is a very long piece of program music, which does not always carry out with accuracy the idea of the poem upon which it is based. It is composed with an almost painful correctness, but much of it is frankly commonplace. Most of the themes are not sufficiently vital for the lively subject which they attempt to depict. It is well scored, but in the orchestration the same idea of correctness manifests itself continually, such as the development, or rather the reiteration of one theme in the various choirs, one after the other, always in four-part harmony. The general effect of the composition as a whole was that it was decidedly a labored work, as it shows little spontaneity.

The soloist was Mme. Povla Frijsh, who has a voice of moderate range and power and of about the same quality, but has an artistic style. She sang first the Archangel's song from "The Redemption" of Cesar Franck, and later a group of three songs, all with orchestra, "The Hopak" of Moussorgsky, "L'Invitation au Voyage" of Duparc and the "Hymn to the Sun" of Alexandre Georges. She appeared to the best advantage in the shorter songs, of which that of Duparc is much the best.

WIN SIX HONOR FLAGS

Many Other Departments of Gloucester Plant to Receive Them

Six departments of the Welsbach Company's plant, Gloucester City, have received honor flags for going over their quota in the Victory Loan drive. They are the chemical research, finishing, ring sorting, thoriums, by-products and control laboratory. Next Tuesday, it is stated by Dr. Harlan S. Miner, chairman of the Gloucester committee, twenty-five other departments will receive similar flags.

At a meeting held at the plant yesterday afternoon there were talks made by Benjamin E. Chapin, of Newark, chairman of the New Jersey minute men; W. S. Williamson, secretary of the same organization; G. A. Tatem, chairman of the Camden county minute men, and Milton K. Stanley, a county detective. They commended the 1500 employes of the company, who are mostly women, for loaning their money to the government.

A drive will be made at the Pusey & Jones shipyards on Monday and Tuesday. Already several hundred of the shipyard men have subscribed for the bonds.

Gloucester will go far over its quota, according to Doctor Miner.
