JUST GOSSIP ABOUT PEOPLE

Nancy Wynne Talks of the Zimmerman Tea Today. She Hears of a Rummage Sale for Next Week. She Attends the Women Writers' Dinner.

IT WAS too bad that it rained so hard yesterday for Celestine Warder's dansant. But bless your heart, it did not dampen the attendance. Every one was there and the flowers were just gorgeous. Celestine looked sweet and Mrs. Warder was charming as ever.

I do hope it will keep clear today for the Zimmermann tea out at Rydal. Harriet is so good-looking, don't you think? She is very tall, but innately graceful and has lovely wavy light hair. She is very musical, too, and has a charming manner.

There will be about twenty debutantes who will receive with her this afternoon, including Margaret Graham, Marion Baird, Gertrude Conaway, Peggy Rosengarten, Evelyn Smith, Hope Wilson, Anne Townsend, Margarettta Sharpless, Mary Goodman, Marie Louise Ashburst, Kathleen Ritter, Dorothy Ely, Marina Wister, Betsy Davis, Celestine Warder, Elizabeth Anne Taylor, Jane Yeatman, Rhoda Brooke, Rosamond Wurts, Deborah Logan and Lucy Gray.

DICKIE NEWBOLD is to have a party tonight. One of those lovely affairs at the Rabbit, which are always such fun. Mr. Wilson Catherwood, a friend of Dickie's father, is giving it, and it is a dinner dance. Dickie's real name is Mary Dixon Newbold, you know, but every one calls her Dickie. She is the eldest daughter of Mr. Clem Newbold, of Jenkintown, and a sister of Anna Newbold.

DID you know that the Independence Square Red Cross is going to have a rummage sale on October 22, 23 and 24 at its headquarters, 608 Chestnut street? The workrooms there are going on in full swing, and they are getting up a health and hygiene class to meet every Thursday morning.

The women who are interested in the rummage sale are Mrs. Otis Skinner, and she is a picture always; Mrs. Burd Grubb, Mrs. Ashton Little, Mrs. Walter Hopkinson, Mrs. Emott Hare, Mrs. Alan Stockton, Mrs. Harrold Gillingham, Mrs. Wellington Shannon, Miss Eloise Dickie, Mrs. Fred English, Mrs. Snowden Mitchell and Mrs. George Lorimer, who is chairman. The aides are all going to wear little blue (denim) aprons and small red crosses. And they have everything but the kitchen stove already for sale.

WELL, my dears, did you go to the Women Writers' Dinner last night? I did, and I assure you it was some party! They had the dinner first and then some of the talent of the club appeared in a fearful and wonderful play entitled "A Night in Persia." A strange and remarkable slave led onto the stage the king and his wife of fifty years. The queen's name, by the way, was Lucky Strike. They were to celebrate their golden wedding.

As the slave led them in the stately queen, who by actual measurement is more than six feet high, wore on her head ostrich feathers, which heightened her stature by some two feet. Her gown, what there was of it, was purple, her stockings of flaming silk and the headdress was of blue, black and white ostrich feathers. The king, my dears, the king! He was not tall, but what he lost in height he made up in width, and his red sash was a thing of beauty, to say nothing of his white apparel and his red whiskers!

After a stately dance, which proved how happy they had been during those fifty years of wedded life, their majesties ascended the throne. Then a most remarkable animal, a cross between a "coutie hound" and a Persian cat, in khaki color, came sauntering in and sat down by the queen, licking her paws and washing her face all through the performance.

A snake charmer, who performed wonderful feats with stuffed stockings, gave an exhibition, and a Chinese juggler juggled everything in sight, even hitting the dignified queen in the eye by mistake with a water pistol, which he drew from the leg of his sleeve. Then there was a sight seer and a hypnotist. All was going beautifully, when Melachrino, the vampire, entered and began a marvelous dance. In fact, I never saw anything like it either before and I hope never will again. Also the story has no moral, for the queen tried in vain to hold the king on the throne, but finally he fled from her and clasped the vampire to his manly bosom. Then the queen descended and tried again to drag him away, and the hypnotist meantime had tried to interfere by hypnotizing the vamp. The king freed one arm and with his scimitar stabbed the queen, who died in various places on the floor, and wickedness triumphed as the king and the vamp ascended the throne.

The various parts were taken by members of the club, who included editors of our leading magazines and newspapers and a number of women engaged in advertising. I laughed till the tears poured down my cheeks. It certainly was some party.
