GOSSIP OF THE STREET

The leading interests in the Street have little to say about the stock market outlook, but confidence is shown in many quarters about the situation, and the opinion generally prevails that leading stocks have again gone into strong hands and that the supply of stocks has been depleted to the smallest volume known in recent years.

Some of the brokers watching the trading say that market movements to a great extent are directed by bear operations, including concentrated attacks against several stocks and efforts to cover shorts in the general list. It is insisted by them, however, that even on advances there is no supply of long stock, and where shorts cover the selling comes almost wholly from the professional element on the floor which seems to base its operations on a belief that after the hurried advances the market will react and permit buying the stocks back at a profit.

According to some of those who should be well informed about market transactions generally, the situation is being strenghtened with every day's trading, and they expect that before the end of the month business will again be on a large scale at substantial advances in prices. Some of them think that the market has been repressed purposely in order that too extensive advances should not be made before the actual change in the federal administration occurs, but the technical position became too strong for the market to be repressed any longer, especially as it is asserted that there is no element of weakness anywhere in the situation.

Those who watch the trading in Reading say that buying is of the best possible character and it is generally agreed that little importance is to be attached to the details of the first proposition to be submitted to the Department of Justice for complying with the mandate of the Supreme Court. The general understanding is that in the final plan full provision is made for retiring the prior liens of the company and leaving its assets free for distribution.

Some of those who are included in the highest banking ranks expect that Reading will soon sell at far above its present market price, and that the final plan will create an entirely different situation in connection with Reading common stock.

The manner in which the petroleum stocks act is regarded as indicating absorption of the stocks of producing companies partly because of statements in regard to the limit of production having been reached in developments of the last two years, and it is asserted in some of these circles that it will not be long before the downward movement of crude oil and petroleum products is suddenly checked and prices go above their previous high records.

Reading's Plan and the Bondholder

Some bond men who have studied the Reading segregation plan declare that while it is a "melon" for stockholders the plan is prejudicial to the bondholders, according to a local news bureau, which goes on to say:

"One bond man contends that the coal company on a conservative estimate has 1,000,000,000 tons of coal, which, at ten cents a ton, is $100,000,000. The general mortgage bonds cover this coal property. He pointed out that the general mortgage bondholders are asked to waive a $100,000,000 asset for $9,600,000, which is the amount of the premium—being 16 per cent on the par value of the bonds—to be paid to bondholders who sign acquiesence waiving obligation of the coal company under the mortgage.

"It is also urged that the segregation plan, as filed by the Reading Co., does not state that the $25,000,000 coal company bonds to be turned over by the latter company to the Reading Co. are to be pledged under the general mortgage. It is understood that these bonds will be pledged as collateral under the refunding and improvement general mortgage proposed in the plan, which mortgage is to be a direct lien on coal property as well.

"In other circles it was stated that possible objections by bondholders were considered by the committee in working out the plan. Bondholders are not compelled to deposit their holdings under the plan. In time there might be two classes of bonds, 'stamped bonds,' being those which have assented and 'unstamped bonds' or unassented bonds. It was suggested that the 'stamped bonds' might have preference in the market and in time there would be a difference in quotations between the two classes of bonds which would induce arbitraging, that is purchase of unassented bonds by brokers who would afterward deposit them under the plan and collect the 10 per cent premium."

Business Slowing Down

In a discussion of the business and financial outlook, William A. Law, president of the First National Bank, says in this week's issue of the brochure put out by that bank:

The country has plenty of credit and it is to be hoped that Congress will not be prevailed upon to increase the supply, or to provide additional expedients for temporizing with a situation which calls for careful curtailment where that is possible. Confidence in values will alone assure trading and will stimulate construction without additional credit devices. The Federal Reserve System is operating admirably under the wise leadership of seven members of the Federal Reserve Board who have undertaken a job as important as has ever been entrusted to a government commission. These men are rendering signal service to the nation, for the whole world is beginning to realize that the war was much the most costly undertaking that human beings ever engaged in and that every living person must in some way play his part. The effort to solve the highly complicated problems of reconstruction calls for the exercise of financial statesmanship of the higher order. It is not work for small caliber men, and the country is to be congratulated that the services of such men as Paul M. Warburg and the present members of the board can be secured for the Federal Advisory Council and for the board itself.

So long as the United States acts as banker for the rest of the world and the government itself is a frequent market borrower there will be no permanently easy money in sight. The foreign demand for credit must continue far in excess of the supply released through the reduction of outstanding indebtedness by private domestic borrowers. This situation will be corrected in time, however, but it is apparent that thoroughgoing relief must await the solution of the foreign financial problems which are still big factors in the outlook. This country has grown so industrially within the last seven years that sustained prosperity is dependent upon developing foreign markets for American products and merchandise. In no other way will it be possible to utilize "at capacity" the immensely valuable industrial organization which has been built up since the world war began.
