Nancy Wynne Talks of Seeing the Sanders Twins in Smart Clothes—She Hears That Miss Willcox Has Opened a Tea Room in Wawa

I SAW the Sanders twins on Chestnut street yesterday, and they looked so smart, and were going so fast, and looking ahead so hard, and were altogether so attractive, that I did not take in what kind of a hat the other had on, or which was who. They both wore long blue capes and one had a hat of blue flowers, and what is more, the flowers were dark blue, and the other hat was kind of Persiany all colors, but I can't quite visualize it for you, for, as I said, they were going so fast and looking so hard, I stopped to see what they were looking at. I did not succeed, but I went on up the street with a pleasant feeling. They looked so happy and wideawake and sweet I felt happy myself.

HAVE you heard about the tea room that Katherine Willcox is going to open up at Wawa? She's going to call it the "Wild Goose" because, and this I did not know before, Wawa is the Indian name for Wild Goose. Isn't that a pretty little idyl? Katherine is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Willcox, of Media, you know, and a sister of Marjorie Willcox, who married Alberto Santa Maria a couple of years ago. Her brother, Mark Willcox, married Margaret Keating, a daughter of the late Dr. John Keating, and a sister of Peter McCall Keating, who is to marry Mary Awbrey, of San Antonio, Tex., in June. The Mark Willcoxes have two of the cutest little sons. I believe there are other children, too, but I happened to see these two in town the other day, and they are darlings.

I think this tea room undertaking of Katherine Willcox is a fine idea, as motorists want these little places along the roads more than ever these days, and did you know that Mrs. Wilson, who was formerly Kate Stellwagen, a sister of Mrs. Walter Roche, and Helen Johns and her aunt have started up a tea room at the old Black Horse Inn, which is west of Media on the Bethlehem pike?

THE Plays and Players held another club night last evening and will repeat the plays tonight. The first play was very interesting, "Petticoat Perfidy," and was given only by women. Uytendale Caner, Sophie Norris and Margaret Remak were the three in the cast, and Mrs. Caner directed the play. The second one-act play was "Leave the Woman Out," and it was directed by Joe Deering and acted by men, Tommy Hart, William Jamison, Jr., and Herbert Casey.

The third play reminded one of the comedy given last week by home talent, in that its name was the same, "Why Not?" but it was a one-act play, and the parts were taken by Helena Balbirnie, Sophie Yarnall and George Edwards.

There were a great many there last night and the audience was very enthusiastic. I wonder when the Plays and Players will start work on their new building? I heard rumors recently that they might not build after all, but buy a larger place already built. But you never can tell anything by mere rumors, can you? It's a delightful club, any way, and one in which the members are always interested.

I HEARD rumors of an awfully nice engagement the other day and, furthermore, that it's coming out pretty soon; at least that's what the little bird who whispered to me about it told me, and I think so myself, having seen them together, because they have that sort of self-conscious look that is unmistakable when you meet them walking or riding in her little car.

You'll never guess who in the world, because I don't think you know any more than I did, that they even knew each other. But, boys and girls, they do! And she's a peach of a girl, too. An out-of-doorsy kind of person who loves golf and looks perfectly stunning in sports clothes. Really it's an awfully nice alliance and I'm sure you'll want to congratulate both, because the man is fine, too, and when you hear it you'll think them wonderfully well suited, only, somehow, you never did have them in your mind before. It's a great life and full of surprises, but if all the surprises are as nice as this one, me for plenty of them.

NANCY WYNNE.
