MONDAY MORNING.....JUNE 26.

CASH VS. HEART.

Arrow, when the moonlight was shining,
And the south wind in whispers wrote,
A youth by the Ashley reclining,
Thus poured forth his soul's warm devotion,
To a lady, and I sing for the maiden.
Who dwells in the depth of yon grove;
Not the lily, its whiteness arrayed in,
So beautiful seems to my love.

And the maiden, she drank in the ditty,
With keen ear and a tremulous heart;
But there dwelt an old man in the city,
And he in her musings had part;
She answered love's song by another,
To the same air, but less sweet.
And some sighs which she could not quite smother,
Found their way to the youth in the street.

"Ah! me—I confess you are dearest,
But then, you can buy nothing dear;
Your voice is the sweetest and clearest,
And I dote on your whiskers and hair.
But then, the old man in the city,
Has bonds, and bank notes, and a store
Of treasures both costly and pretty,
And he promises gold with galore.

"With you, I procure love by marriage,
But love is poor feeding alone;
With him I have horses and carriage;
With you but a crust and a bone;
He leaves me no time to consider,
Still pressing with tongue and with pen;
But if ever he leaves me a widow,
With his treasures—comes sing to me then!"

Mr. and Mrs. Sparrowgrass Retire from the City to Enjoy Rural Life.

[From the June Knickerbocker.]

When Mrs. Sparrowgrass and I moved into the country, with our heads full of fresh butter and cool crisp radishes for tea; with ideas entirely lucid respecting milk, and a looseness of calculation as to the number in family it would take to a good laying hen to supply with fresh eggs every morning; when Mrs. Sparrowgrass and I moved into the country, we found some preconceived notions had to be abandoned, and some departures made from the plans we had laid down in the little back parlor in avenue G.

One of the first achievements in the country is early rising! with the lark, with the sun, while the dew is on the grass, "under the open eye-lids of the morn," and so forth. Early rising! What can be done with five or six o'clock in town? What may not be done at these hours in the country, with the hoe, the rake the dibble, the spade, the watering pot? To plant, to prune, drill, transplant, graft train and sprinkle! Mrs. S. and I agreed to rise early in the country!

Early rising in the country is not an instinct; it is a sentiment, and must be cultivated.

A friend recommended me to send to the south side of Long Island for some very prolific potatoes, the real hippopotamus breed. Down went my man, what with expenses of horse hire, tavern bills, toll-gates, and breaking a wagon, the hippopotami cost as much apiece as pine-apples. They were fine potatoes though, with comely features and large languishing eyes, that promised increase of family without delay. As I worked my own garden, (for which I hired a landscape gardener at $2 per day, to give me instructions,) I concluded that the object of my first experience in early rising should be the planting of the hippopotamus. Uncoordingly rose next morning at five, and it rained! I rose next day at five, and it rained! The next, and it rained! It rained for two weeks! We had splendid potatoes every day for dinner. "My dear," said I to Mrs. Sparrowgrass, "where did you get those fine potatoes?" "Why," said she, innocently, "out of that basket from Long Island!" The John of the hippopotamuses were before me, peeled and boiled, and mashed and baked with a nice thin brown crust on the top!

I was more successful afterwards. I dig out some fine seed potatoes in the ground. But something was the matter at the end of the season I did not get as many out as I put in.

Mrs. Sparrowgrass, who is a notable housewife said to me one day, "Now, my dear, we shall soon have plenty of eggs, for I have been buying a lot of young chickens." There they were, each one with as many lungs (feathers I mean) as a grasshopper, and a chirp not louder. Of course we looked forward with pleasant hopes to the period when the first cackle should ombolden the milk-white egg warmly deposited in the hay which we had provided bountifully. They grew lively, and one day I ventured to remark that our hens had remarkably large combs, to which Mrs. Sparrowgrass replied, "Yes, indeed, she had observed that; but if I wanted to have a real treat I ought to get up early in the morning and hear them crow." "Crow," said I that crowed in the morn to wake the cock shaven and shorn," we might as well give up all hopes of having eggs," said I; "for as sure as you live, Mrs. Sparrowgrass, your hens are all roosters!" And so they were roosters! They grew up and fought with the neighbors' chickens until there was not a whole pair of eyes on either side of the fence.

A dog is a good thing to have in the country. I have one which I raised from a pup. He is a good shout fellow, and a hearty barker and feeder. The man of whom I bought him said he was a thorough bred, but he began to have a mongrel look about him. He is a good watch dog though, for the moment he sees any suspicious-looking person about the premises he comes right into the kitchen and gets behind the stove. At first we kept him in the house, and he scratched all night to get out. Then we turned him out in the yard, he scratched all night to get in. Then we tied him up at the back of the garden, and he howled so that our neighbor shot at him twice before daybreak. Finally, we gave him away, and he came back; and now he is just recovering from a fit, in which he has torn up the patch that had been sown for our spring radishes.

A good strong gate is a necessary article for your garden. A good strong heavy gate, with a dedicated hinge, so that it will neither open or shut. Such a one had I last year. The grounds before my fence are in common, and all the neighbors' cows pasture there. I remarked to Mrs. S., as we stood at the window in June last, how placid and picturesque the cattle looked as they strolled about cropping the green herbage. Next morning I found the innocent creatures in my garden. They had not left a green thing in it. The corn in the milk, the beans on the poles, the young cabbages, the tender lettuce, even the thriving shoots on my young fruit trees had vanished. And there they were, looking quietly on the ruin they had made. Our watch-dog, too, was fore-gathering with them. He was too much, so I got a large stick and drove them all out, except a young heifer, which I chased all over the flower beds, breaking down my trellises, my woodbines and sweet briers, my roses and petunias, until I cornered her in the hot-bed. I had to call for assistance to extricate her from the sashes, and her owner sued me for damages and recovered. I believe I shall move into town.

A HANGING CASE IN KENTUCKY.—In December last, Charles Cushing was murdered in Lexington by Wm. Weigert; the offence that provoked the fatal shot being a slight offence to the assailant's wife. On the 16th inst., the prisoner, who had lain in prison from that time, was brought out for trial, and was convicted of murder in the first degree! Cushing kept a confectionary, which the wife of the prisoner entered in the dusk of evening, in presence of several witnesses, for a purchase. Cushing mistook her for another person, placed his hand on her shoulder, saying, "How are you, pretty?" In an instant he discovered his mistake and apologized, but the lady left in a rage, and soon after her husband and she returned to the shop, when the unfortunate young man was shot down in his tracks!

When the jury had returned, after only twenty minutes absence, and had announced their fatal decree, a most distressing scene was witnessed by the crowd. The prisoner, entirely overcome, left his head fall on his breast, while his wife, his sister and his mother, gave vent to their anguish in heart-rending screams. His wife threw herself upon his neck, and exclaimed passionately, "Oh, why did I do this! why did I do this!" and, "Oh, how could those men find him guilty, when they have families!" Oh! I will die!" The screams gradually subsided into sobs of grief and anguish, while the mournful, harrowing scene afflicted judge, jury, bar and spectators.—Cincinnati Enquirer, June 18.
