DAILY MORNING POST.

TUESDAY MORNING.....MARCH 6.

A DREAM PICTURE.

BY E. PASTORON.

"My eyes make pictures when they are shut"
COLERIDGE.

She lay asleep in the shadow
Of the branching palm, by the side
Of the noble river that rolls for ever
Its broad, "abounding" tide,
Through the heart of Egypt's sands, and
Red tomb, and temple, and pyramid.

She slept in the palm-tree's shadow,
And over her shoulders fair,
Like the sunset's glow on Alpine snow,
Lay the web of her golden hair;
Her bosom rose and fell,
From its white caress on wandering reed,
That a dearer sound than the river,
Or the wind's in the waving trees,
Did ebb and flow, did come and go,
The pulse of that eager heart below,
That throbbed so tenderly.

For she lay asleep in the shadow
Of the branches palm, but far
Her thoughts roved free, in its fantasy
Beneath a northern star.
And even a happy smile would thrill
Over lip and cheek its gleam;
And ever she murmured, soft and low,
As a cooling dove, in her dream—
"O! joy, for the rest and the haven won!
Joy! home, I've sought thee long!"
Oh, the bonny barn, how it leans in the sun!
And the throstle, how sweet its song!"

In the sultry South, a rosy glow,
Now flushed, now died away;
The red flamingo, trailing slow
His burning Nubian way,
Or the drooling water-snake gave past
Their sad and signal spell,
As she was heard the Arab's shout,
And trooping camels round.
Neath the spreading tree, crowned placidly
On the grass of the shady ground.

But the golden Orient swayed no more
The sleeper's soul, for afar
Her thought roved free, in its fantasy,
Beneath the same cold star.
And even the happy smile would throw
Over lip and cheek its gleam;
And ever she murmured soft and low,
As a cooling dove in her dream—
"Oh! joy for the rest and the haven won!
Oh! the chime of the bright home bells!
Over the leathery hills and the windy falls!
And the throstle, how sweet its song!"

And for me, that dream, unbroken,
No jarring change doth know;
By the might of a spell, no tongue can tell,
Its spell doth keep its
From the swarm of shiftings
From memories dark and fair,
I turn after, to my roadside night star,
Up the vista of years, and turn
Its rose full in her beauty.
Neath the branching palm, by the side
Of the royal street that rolls for ever
Its broad, "abounding" tide,
Through the heart of Egypt's sands, and
Red tomb, and pillar, and pyramid.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN DREAMS?

To those who believe in dreams, the following well authenticated account from the Cincinnati Daily Times, will be a rich treat to strengthen their faith:

A SINGULAR DREAM — MOST REMARKABLE REALIZATION.—A young married lady, the wife of a Main street merchant, residing on Race street, in the vicinity of Third, had a most singular dream on the night of Wednesday, December 6th, which has since been realized in a remarkable manner. The name of the lady we withhold, at her request. On the night spoken of, she retired to her bed in a pleasant frame of mind, not, however, particularly elated. The first of the night she was visited by a deep sleep, which, as the dawn appeared, gave way to a slumber of a more broken character. Suddenly she dreamed—and dreaming, saw her brother, the same that two years ago left his orphan home to brave the hardships of Californian life, that he might secure to himself and sister a competence. She saw him rise from a bed in a small but-like tenement, and running his hand under his pillow, drew from thence a revolver and a huge bowie knife, both of which he placed in a belt that he wore around his body. It seemed that it was not far from midnight, for the embers were yet smoking on the hearth, and as they cast their lurid glare over his countenance, she thought that perhaps it was all a dream, but then she concluded that no dream could be so real, and became convinced that all was actual.

While she gazed upon his countenance the expression suddenly changed—it betrayed an intense watchfulness; every pulse seemed suspended and every heart-throb muffled, while the eye stood fixed on a particular spot near the head of the bed, while through a small aperture not noticed before, was a human hand grasping a short keen instrument, looking terribly like a dagger. It apparently sought the head of the bed, for as it touched the pillow it passed itself slowly down to about the supposed region of the heart and poised itself for a second, as if to make sure its aim. That second was sufficient for the brother to rise noiselessly from his seat, draw his bowie-knife from his belt, and advance a single step toward the bed. Just as the dagger descended into the blankets, the knife of the brother came down like a meat-axe, close to the aperture, completely severing the hand of the would-be assassin above the wrist, and causing the dagger and limb to fall on the bed, trophies of his victory. A deep, prolonged yell sounded from without, and on rushing to the aperture and convincing himself that there was but one, the brother unbolted the door and stepped out. The moon was shining, and by the light was discovered a man writhing as if in the last agonies.

The miner drew the body to the door, and turning his face to the fire, beheld the visage of a Mexican, who, for some fancied injury, had sworn to never rest content until he had taken his (the brother's) life. On examining the man closely, he was discovered to have a wound in the vicinity of the heart, which a long, sharp, two-edged blade in his left hand abundantly accounted for. Failing in the attempt to assassinate his victim, he had, with his only remaining hand, driven another knife to his own heart. The lady awoke, and, vividly impressed with the dream, related its substance, as here recorded, to her husband. Judge then of her and his surprise when they yesterday received a letter, from California, per the North Star, from the brother, relating an adventure on the night of the sixth of December, precisely identical with that seen by the lady in her dream. Verily, there are strange things in heaven and earth. Was the dream merely an accidental coincidence, or was the spirit of the dreamer actually present in the lodge of the brother? These and other inquiries involuntarily rise to the lips, and seek a solution not yet granted to mortals to solve.

A Mixed Food Necessary.

If I only bend my arm or move my fingers, there is a certain portion of the tissues destroyed which must be supplied by my food; the more work that a man performs, the more of these nitrogenous substances he requires. So far as supplying the waste of the tissues, it is a matter of indifference whether we give an animal food containing gluten or albumen; but it exercises a considerable influence on the character of the animal. Take, for example, a hunt, at which we have an omnivorous animal, man, riding on a graminivorous animal, a horse, accompanied by a carnivorous animal, a dog, following an herbivorous animal, a hare. Even the character of nations is very materially affected indeed by their food. The other class of food serves a very important, but totally different purpose—namely, that of supplying animal heat. The temperature of our bodies is, in temperate climates at least, higher than the surrounding air. Now, in order to keep up this temperature a combination goes on similar to that of an ordinary fire. The same products—carbonic acid, water and ammonia—are evolved from the mouth of the furnace of the body and the mouth of a common chimney. In cold weather, a certain portion of heat is gradually abstracted from our body, which must be supplied by the combustion of our food or of the matter of our bodies; the colder the climate, therefore, the more heat-giving materials must be supplied in the food.—Professor Lyon Playfair.

WINTER WHEAT.—Thus far, the various accounts respecting the prospects of the wheat crop, are highly favorable. Respecting the crop in Michigan, the Detroit Free Press says:—From all sections we hear that the wheat is looking exceedingly well. The quantity upon the ground is greater than in any former year, and with no intervening calamity, the crop will be unprecedented.
