A FINANCIAL SKIRMISH.

Beau Hackett in search of a "tiger."

EDITOR POST: The world is growing better. I know it. Men have forgotten their horrid selfishness and mean passions, and are studying how they can be of service to the interests of their fellow-beings. The doctrine of total depravity is defunct, virtue reigns triumphant.

For example. I received a remittance the other day of fifty dollars from the gentleman from whom I descended in a direct line, he being my father. Fifty dollars is wholly inadequate to the purchase of an ordinary suit of clothes in these times. What would purchase canvas enough for a circus tent three years ago, won't pay for a canvass-back duck now. To be brief, I felt as much lost with my fifty dollars as I did without it.

But a philanthropist came to the rescue.—As neat and handsome a man as ever I saw, (and I see myself daily) saw me take the money from the post office, and immediately volunteered to lend me any assistance that I might need. The money was not heavy, and I found no difficulty in carrying it myself, for it was principally paper.

But ah, what a generous friend that young man proved. He could not be induced to forsake me. He saw that I was in distress, because the sum of money was not as large as I desired, and he proposed to reveal a plan, gratuitously, (bless him!) whereby I could double it. I was enraptured with my new acquaintance. We strolled together arm in arm, and were very happy.

We met half a dozen individuals displaying all the fixtures and appurtenances belonging to perfect gentlemen, including mustachios. My friend introduced me to all of them, with stunning politeness. He had a peculiar habit of shutting one eye when he introduced me. I think the operation had a sort of magnetic or mesmeric influence, for I observed that the other gentlemen shut one eye too. The new acquaintances all joined my particular friend and me in a general promenade. My "particular" whispered in my ear that I had better take good care of my pocket book; that a stranger never knew who to trust, and all that. He said I was perfectly safe as long as he was with me, but if I felt any uneasiness he would carry my money in his pocket. I overwhelmed him with gratitude, and told him I didn't want to annoy him so much.

Said he to his friends: "Let's take Beau Hackett to see the 'tiger.'"

I thanked him kindly. Told him I had a free ticket to a menagerie, which I never used, and that I had no particular affection for the brute creation.

"But we want you to fight the tiger," was the unanimous chime.

I protested. Informed my friends that I was not an athlete, and never indulged in any such sports. With a good rifle I could probably hold my own with a tiger if he came within my fire limits.

My particular friend said they meant a faro bank. It was a gay institution, and I could make a fortune in a few minutes. It occurred to me suddenly that a bank was just the thing I needed, seeing I had considerable capital on hand. I consented to go with them, and I saw their eyes sparkle. We went up stairs in a big brick house and stopped in room No. 6. One man stood behind a table, which was covered with green cloth. On the table were a deck of cards, a silver box, and a heap of ivory checks. The green cloth, I was told, was intended to be a verification of Tom Moore's line, "The innocent gambols on the green." I saw one man who seemed to be taking up a collection. He had a saintly face, and declared himself ready to "copper the bet." Thereupon he doubled a ten-dollar note on the ace and covered it with a copper cent. A man, wearing the expression of a broken-down tragedian, flopped four shillings on the tray and lost. He took it coolly though, got up and walked back and forth on the floor, looking like a picture of Napoleon at Helena, (Ark.) and presently began to recite some lines that were running in his head. Said he, in a truly stragical voice, "The king is dead! the king is dead!" "Thunder and lightning!" exclaimed a man at the table, "why didn't you tell me so? I've got my money on that card!"

I coppered a bet. I liked the fun. The crowd gathered around me, and I think from my elegant but attenuated form, and alacrity with the "tiger," they mistook me for John Morgan. Their attentions to me were astonishing. I coppered a ten dollar bill on a double-headed Jack and have never seen it since. I got a round of applause on it though. They called that "pluck." Somebody said "take up them sleepers." I looked around and was unable to see but one. He was a stalwart Ethiopian, reclining with his head on a spittoon. I was afterwards told that sleepers were the dead bets. I observed one man who seemed to have a mathematical turn of mind. The red checks were worth more than the white ones. Taking one of them in his fingers he asked, "if a piece of ivory one inch in diameter costs five dollars, how much will an elephant come to?" I couldn't tell.

I coppered another ten dollar bill through spite, and it disappeared suddenly. I told the banker he didn't let my money stay on the table long enough to know whether I won or lost. He insisted that he knew his "biz," and told me to try my luck again. I told him if my luck continued as it had commenced, my money would not go a great way. He said he thought it would go a good deal further than I expected. The "looker-out" began to look sick. I asked him what was the matter, and he said his share of the profits of the bank consisted only in a division of the silver, and he had not made a cent since the war broke out. Whereupon he stalked away, whistling, "When this cruel war is over." I kept betting. I had had bad luck, and I wanted revenge.

As my funds diminished, I became more excited. I bet recklessly. I coppered the queen for a dollar, and her majesty snubbed me. The tray betrayed me; the deuce played the dickens, and the whole deck was leagued against me. Finally, I planked down my last five on the ace. I announced that it was my last. My particular friend went around on the opposite side of the table. He caressed me no more. The dealer called the ace; lost. There was a buzz for a moment, then loud laughter. My smiling friends gathered on one side of me. I was about to ask my "particular" to see me home, when the earth opened to receive me, I reckon. They knew the plank too well; they stood just right, the spring went off at the proper time, and I arrived suddenly in the basement, in three feet of water and some mud. I felt, for a moment, that I had been imposed upon, but as soon as I straightened up out of the water I was willing to admit that such was not the case. The splash in the basement attracted a policeman who was half a block distant, and he rushed in to see if a safe had been blown open. I told him I was a "hoc card," and I wanted him to take me up tenderly. He took me up. I offered to conduct him to room number six, if he wanted to see where I came from. We went to number six.

From the appearance of the room, one would have supposed that it had been decorated eight years ago, not later. Table, green cloth, coppers, sleepers, betters, all were gone. I related my story briefly to the policeman. He said, if stupidity were trump, I could play against the whole world. I told him that was equivalent to an assertion that no policeman ever gambled, and we parted. Policemen are badly brought up in this country anyhow.

I have lost a good friend, and I don't know where to find him. My "particular" holds forth at number six no longer. The Thompsonian physic was no remedy in his case.—But he is a good man, and I advise every one who becomes acquainted with him to cultivate him. Never desert him as long as you have any money left. It would break his heart. Let his passion for play be not to his discredit. A Christian is a good man, but he is a better.

I am, contingently,

BEAU HACKETT.

MEDICINAL.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

A pure and powerful tonic, corrective and alterative of wonderful efficacy in diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

Cures Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Headache, General Debility, Nervousness, Depression of Spirits, Constipation, Colic, Intermittent Fever, Cramps and Spasms, and all Complaints of either Sex, arising from Bodily Weakness, whether inherent in the system, or produced by special causes.

Nothing that is not wholesome, genial and restorative in its nature enters into the composition of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. This popular preparation contains no mineral of any kind, no deadly botanical element; no fiery excitant; but it is a combination of the extracts of rare balsamic herbs and plants, with the purest and mildest of all diffusive stimulants.

It is well to be forearmed against disease, and, so far as the human system can be protected by human means against maladies engendered by an unwholesome atmosphere, impure water, and other external causes, HOSTETTER'S BITTERS may be relied on as a safeguard.

In districts infected with FEVER AND AGUE, it has been found infallible as a preventative, and reliable as a remedy, and thousands who resort to it under apprehension of an attack, escape the scourge; and thousands who neglect to avail themselves of its protective qualities in advance, are cured by a very brief course of this marvelous medicine. Fever and Ague patients, after being plied with quinine for months in vain, until fairly saturated with that dangerous alkaloid, are not unfrequently restored to health within a few days by HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

The weak stomach is rapidly invigorated, and the appetite restored by this agreeable Tonic, and hence it works wonders in cases of Dyspepsia and in loss confirmed forms of Indigestion. Acting as a gentle and painless aperient, as well as upon the liver, it also invariably relieves the constipation superinduced by irregular action of the digestive and secretive organs.

Persons of feeble habit, liable to Nervous Attacks, Lowness of Spirits, and Fits of Languor, find prompt and permanent relief from the Bitters. The testimony on this point is most conclusive, and from both sexes.

The agony of BILIOUS COLIC is immediately assuaged by a single dose of the stimulant, and by occasionally resorting to it, the return of the complaint may be prevented.

As a General Tonic HOSTETTER'S BITTERS produce effects which must be experienced or witnessed before they can be fully appreciated. In cases of CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, PREMATURE DECAY AND Debility and Decrepitude arising from OLD AGE, it exercises the electric influence. In the convalescent stages of all diseases it operates as a delightful invigorant. When the powers of nature are relaxed, it operates to re-enforce and re-establish them.

Last, but not least, it is The Only Safe Stimulant being manufactured from sound and innocuous materials, and entirely free from the acid elements present more or less in all the ordinary tonics and stomachics of the day.

So family medicine has been so universally, and, it may be truly added, deservedly popular with the intelligent portion of the community, as HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.
