GOSSIP OF THE STREET

Not in years has the death of any of the members of the local financial community been received with such profound sorrow as the announcement yesterday of the sudden passing away of T. DeWitt Cuyler. In his many active associations, Mr. Cuyler had made a host of friends and was generally looked to by the financial world as a fearless leader.

Some weeks ago, his closest friends endeavored to pursuade him to lessen some of his activities, but he stubbornly refused to surrender the leadership until his work had been completed.

Ever since the war Mr. Cuyler, as one of his intimates expressed it yesterday, had been going at things and doing things under a full head of steam. As an adviser, his loss is regarded as almost irreparable, because his opinion was ever looked upon as an unimpeachable authority.

British Argentine Meat Company

According to London advices, more than 90 per cent of the shareholders of the British and Argentine Meat Company have accepted the offer recently made for the purchase of their ordinary and preference shares by the Western United Investment Company, and the deal now automatically goes through, as only 75 per cent of both classes of shares was required.

The offer for the stock was on the basis of 65 shillings for the ordinary shares and 36s. 6d for the preferred, payable in cash November 15, the purchase being guaranteed by Lord Vestey and Sir E. H. Vestey, directors of the Union Cold Storage Company. The directors of the British and Argentine Meat Company retire under the terms of the proposal and receive 250,000 each as compensation.

Trade Conditions Better

Commenting on the general situation in the monthly review, the Mechanics and Metals National Bank of New York, says:

"Taking the country as a whole, trade is better than a year ago, although of course all indications are not favorable in the same degree, nor does every section of the country share alike in the condition that gives an optimistic tone to nearly every business discussion. There is an irregularity to the advance which has occurred in prices, and certain farm products are lagging, so that the buying power of the West's great productive industries continues to be curtailed. Still, expansion is sufficiently pronounced on the whole to bring about a sharp contrast in business volume and earnings with a short time ago, and there is substantial foundation for the cheerful views which are entertained and for the expectation of further expansion on sound lines."

Technical Influences

There was no trace in yesterday's stock market operations of the disturbed conditions and unsettlement of values that had been so pronounced during the three preceding days of the week. This change in market conditions came without any special development that could have exerted favorable influence on the trading situation. It was a natural assumption decline which occurred, dating back from late in October, constituted a natural reaction from high levels, which needed no explanation of any special character, and was simply incidental to a long-continued upward movement.

Such interruptions must be expected when technical conditions called for recessions from established high levels. The large volume of Wall Street news was again spoken of as a potentially influence on trading, but little importance was attached to these statements.

Comparisons with 1919 have not taken into consideration the frozen credits which were the disturbing influence in all business activities at that time. The day's price movements, generally, consisted of advances ranging from one to more than ten points, the greatest gain being made in specialties.

An increase of more than $225,000,000 in the public debt during October is shown in figures made public by the Treasury. On October 31, the gross public debt stood at $23,977,000,000, compared with $22,812,000,000 on September 30 and with $23,350,000,000 on October 31, 1921.

Issuance of Government securities in excess of redemptions during the month, particularly of the last billion dollar bond issue, Treasury officials explained, was responsible for the increase, but was not regarded as interfering with the orderly reduction of the national debt which is effected quarterly.

Ordinary receipts of the Government during October aggregated $301,000,000 compared with $238,000,000 in October of last year, with the total expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts for the month amounted to $436,000,000, against $393,000,000 in October a year ago.

Public debt receipts for the month totaled $807,000,000, against $881,000,000 during the September month last year, while public debt expenditures aggregated $702,000,000, against $546,000,000 in October, 1921.

Customs receipts during October increased, compared with a year ago, while internal revenue collections declined. Receipts from customs duties for the month aggregated $40,000,000, compared with $29,000,000 a year ago, while income and profits tax collections totaled $27,000,000, against $48,000,000 in October last year and miscellaneous internal revenue this month amounted to $78,000,000, against $113,000,000 in October a year ago.

National Cloak and Suit

S. G. Rosenbaum, president National Cloak and Suit Company, just returned from a trip to the Kansas City plant. Says sales volume in October reached the highest point in the company's history. Improvement in Western territory continues. Mail orders place in the receivers in price. From other interests close to the company it is learned that earnings are running at a rate of between $7 and $8 a share on $12,000,000 common stock outstanding.

Volume for year will be in excess of $40,000,000, and the management is looking forward to a business of $48,000,000 in 1923. There are no bank loans, and cash position is strong. Working capital is approximately $7,550,000, compared with $6,137,000 in 1920 and $3,095,000 in 1919.

How to Reform Juries : —By J. P. McEVOY

WHENEVER a lawyer wakes up in the morning with nothing on his mind, it occurs to him almost instantly that something should be done about reforming the jury system.

It grieves lawyers to be continually looking into the vague and vacuous faces of jurymen, and this grief seeps down into their self-consciousness and clabbers the milk of human kindness in their breasts. After all, juries are much harder on lawyers than lawyers are on juries. Nobody has to serve on a jury if he is at all ingenious in the devising of excuses. He can always arrange to have his wife fall off the roof while fixing the chimney, or he can acquire the hives. Or, if he is very clever, he can look so imple they won't take him on the jury.

Of course, this last requires a degree of cleverness that very few of us possess unless we come by it naturally.

On the other hand (if you take the time to go through the preceding you will find where the other hand is), once a lawyer always a lawyer, and just as soon as a lawyer begins to recustom himself to looking at a jury without mental anguish and distress they clang the jury on him and he must go through it all over again.

BUT this is not what the lawyers mean when they ask for jury reform. They want better judges of human nature on the jury, seeing it is quite obvious fact that on every hand is the most marvelous material in the old sailing to be asked.

I refer to bankers, librarians and pawnbrokers. Who, for instance, knows more about human nature than one who is continually lending things to others? A man displays his real character when he borrows.

Take the case of a librarian who is always lending books; that is, when he isn't just out of the book you want. If a man borrows a book from a library, he returns it because he must; but if this same man borrows a book from you and does not return it, he is merely normal. If he brings it right back when he said he would, the chances are that he is psychopathic.

Watch such a man vigilantly; he is merely building up your confidence so that when he comes to your house the next time he can take your silverware out for a walk.

BUT to get back to my subject (if you take the time to go through the paragraphs above, you may discover what it is; I've forgotten), how could you find a jury of keener judges of human nature than pawnbrokers?

Did you ever try to put anything over on a pawnbroker? Sure, almost everybody has. Did you get away with it? Ah! you blush.

And as for bankers, what a wonderful jury a jury of bankers would be, especially if you wanted a verdict of not guilty, for if there is one word that bankers dearly love—one word which they pronounce with almost maternal affection—it is that short but eloquent monosyllable "No."

Little Benny's Note Book

The Eskimos

1

Live Esquimos are nothing loth
When you go in canoes of tin
And want it our blunder how cold it is
As long as they think its thin.

2

They cave snow and ice all summer long,
And also in spring and fall.
But naturally in the winter time
They have the most of it.

3

The ice and snow keep on thickening
And the days are 6 months long.
So naturally if you want to know
It must seem like something long.

4

An Esquimo goes to his tailor
In their effort to keep warm,
And tells they may feel comfortable
It makes them think around the form.

5

The air is cold as a polar bear
Or even sunnier things such as herring
So one of the favorite tools is a saw
The opposite of sawdust.

After Dinner Tricks

No. 309—Coin Balanced on Pin

The performer offers to balance a coin on its edge, on the point of a pin. This sounds impossible; nevertheless, he does it.

The drawing explains the secret. Two forks are rolled in to assist in the accomplishment of the feat. The prongs of the forks are wedged together, and the coin is wedged in between the prongs. The coin may then be balanced on the point of the pin, the forks acting as counter-weights. It is best to use a half dollar. If a silver dollar is at hand, it will prove even more satisfactory.
