PITTSBURGH GAZETTE.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 13, 1852.

We find the following in the Portsmouth (Va.) Transcript:—"A wealthy American merchant of the city of New Orleans, married a Creole lady of fortune, and with the estates and servants, there came into his possession a mulatto seamstress and her daughter, a child of seven years. The gentleman was so much struck with the extraordinary beauty of the child, which had the purest Italian features and complexion, that he resolved to save it from the life of degradation which was before it, and free it and educate it. He sent her to a Northern school, where she remained until her sixteenth year—by all supposed to be a patrician Creole maiden. She herself knew not to the contrary—so young was she when she went North. Beloved by all her companions, the idol of the institute, and caressed by every one, she left to return South, as she supposed to the "roof of her uncle." A young Louisianian gentleman, who had seen her in Philadelphia, and loved her, and was beloved by her, sought her hand on her return. The marriage day was fixed, the day arrived, when the mother, who had been sold away in La Fourche Interior, in order that she might never appear as a witness against her child, reappeared in the bridal hall, in the very hour after the ceremony had been performed, claimed the magnificent and now miserable bride as her daughter—a bond slave by birth, and an African by blood! The scene, as described by one who was present, surpasses the power of pen to portray. That night the bridegroom, after charging the adopted father of his bride with gross deception, shot him through the body and disappeared, carrying, no one knew whither, his infamy and his bitter sorrows. The next morning the bride was found a die lifeless corpse, in the superb nuptial chamber which had been prepared for her reception. She had taken poison! Education, a cultivated mind and taste, which nurtured her, and understood how great was her degradation, now armed her hand with the ready means of death. The unhappy planter recovered from his wound, and removed to the North, where he resides, buried in the deepest seclusion, the recollect of his years embittered by the keenest regrets."
