Retrospection

In a quiet little village
Sits a couple old and gray,
They are thinking of the time
When they were young and gay.
With their children all around them
Happy days were they,
Now some have gone to rest
The others strayed away.
They wait and watch and listen
For their doorsteps every night,
The door is always open
In the window burns a light.
Some day the wanderers will return
Never more to stray,
For they know their parent's love them
In their quaint old-fashioned way.
